Burley escape makes 5 for federal con Martin

By Jennifer Bunch and Liz Wright
Times-News writer

BURLEY — Though classified as an escape risk, convicted bank robber and four-time escape artist Thomas David Martin was treated like any other inmate.

In fact, it took at least 14 hours for jailers to notice Martin and another inmate were missing from the Mini-Cassia Jail Tuesday.

Sometime before 10 p.m. Monday, Martin bolted for his fifth time — this time with Lonnie Ray Wiseman, 27. Both are considered unpredictable and dangerous. They're the first escapes from the jail built in 1991.

"(Martin) is pretty elusive. I hope they get him," said Pablo Sedillo, chief of security for the Santa Fe, N.M. jail.

Authorities say Wiseman may have shorted out an electronically controlled lock on a fire exit, which allowed the pair to vault the jail's 10-foot, barbed-wire-topped cement walls.

A neighbor reported late Tuesday afternoon that she thought she saw two men jump the jail wall Monday night, Cassia County Sheriff Billy Crystal said.

Another witness spotted the men at Circle K Food Store a couple of blocks south of the jail about 10 p.m., Crystal said. They were reported to be wearing their orange or brown jail uniforms, minus their shirts, which were found on the lawn of a house neighboring the store, he said.

The men weren't missed at the jail until lunch time Tuesday. Martin, 36, and Wiseman had stuffed their beds with books and pillow cases, and the beds had not been checked adequately by jail security, Crystal said Wednesday.

The escape caused the dismissal Wednesday of a Twin Falls case in which another inmate allegedly gave Martin several hundred dollars last winter in the Twin Falls County Jail to kill an ex-girlfriend.

The slaying was never committed. Martin's skin displays tattoos of women and flowers, and a scar from where a Twin Falls gun dealer shot him in the buttocks during a burglary last year — a rare instance in which Martin didn't escape.

Last week, Martin was transported back

Batt says nuclear waste deal possible despite federal demands for changes

The Associated Press

BOISE — Gov. Phil Batt was optimistic Wednesday that a deal could still be struck to resume radioactive dumping in Idaho despite the Clinton administration wanting significant changes in the proposal he originally offered.

Batt said Assistant Energy Secretary Thomas Grumbly indicated the administration is willing to discuss the key points in dispute "and the negotiations will continue from here."

"We should be able to determine in the next day or two whether we can reach an agreement," Batt said. "I believe we can reach an agreement."

Although refusing to be specific, the governor said the Energy Department's counterproposal calls for substantially more than the 968 new waste shipments he would accept in return for a court-enforced guarantee that all high-level and most low-level waste be removed from Idaho by 2036.

And among those additional shipments, he said, is waste from commercial nuclear plants, which Batt has vowed the state would never voluntarily accept.

The Energy Department has also proposed to seriously weaken the scheme to enforce the deadline for removing waste from the state — a $100,000-a-day fine, adjusted for inflation, beginning on Jan. 1, 2036, and accumulating until all the waste is removed.

In addition, there remained some dispute over the federal government's commitments under prior agreements for waste cleanup at the Idaho National Engineering Laboratory — commitments apparently dealing with the schedule for solidifying millions of gallons of highly radioactive liquid waste now stored in enclosed vault in the ground.

"I'm not saying these are insurmountable in any way," the governor said. "But they are substantive."

Batt has said he would make minor adjustments but no substantive changes in the 11-page deal he called his final best offer when he presented it to Grumbly two weeks ago.

Although the vast majority of Idaho voters are opposed to any new waste storage at the INEL, Batt pursued a deal when it became obvious to him that eventually Congress or the federal courts will ignore Idaho's objections and mandate resumed dumping.

With a deal, he has argued, the state can at least limit new waste shipments and secure guarantees that all waste at INEL will be cleaned up, its potential environmental hazard neutralized and eventually removed.

His proposal at 968 shipments — 97 tons — covers less than half the shipments the Energy Department wants to dump at the INEL, where 251 tons of high-level waste and millions of cubic feet of low-level waste is already stored.

The renewed state-federal negotiations came as attorneys for the Navy told a three-judge federal appellate panel in Seattle that Idaho's refusal to accept new waste, buttressed by a federal court order,

Agents' tape shows Gem rancher aggressive

The Associated Press

SALMON — The three armed federal agents who tangled with 74-year-old Salmon rancher Eugene Hussey on March 8 were packing more than guns.

They also had a tape recorder. A transcript of the taped confrontation obtained by the Post Register in Idaho Falls through the federal Freedom of Information Act shows the U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service agents were mostly calm and professional during the exchange with Hussey on his ranch south of Salmon.

The officers were investigating the death of a wolf that was shot on Hussey's property shortly after being released in central Idaho.

The transcript shows Hussey acted as the aggressor and was far from the helpless old man portrayed by politicians critical of the investigation.

It reveals he called the agents obscene names and "big federal turds," and tried to pelt the men with rocks.

Hussey calls the tape phony.

The incident drew national attention when conservatives used what they thought happened as an example of excessive federal force. Republican Congressman Helen Chenoweth, who represents northern Idaho, convened a hearing on that issue at which she bawled out federal agents.

Lemhi County sheriff Brett Barsalou called the federal investigators' tactics "heavy-handed and dangerously close to the use of excessive force." Lemhi County commissioners protested their "high-handed actions," and Republican Sen. Larry Craig said what they did was "inexcusable."

The agents initially bit their lips, then called Hussey the aggressor.

"I think the transcript ... shows that we acted professionally and tried to settle him down as much as we could," Tom Riley, one of the three agents involved in the incident, said Tuesday.

The agents arrived on Hussey's property with metal detectors and a search warrant to look for the bullet that killed the wolf in late January. The animal had been brought to Idaho as part of the government's controversial wolf reintroduction plan. It was found dead on Hussey's property lying next to a partially eaten dead calf.

Hussey, who fiercely denied any part in the wolf killing, discounted the tape after excerpts from the transcript were read to him over the telephone Tuesday night.

Fair manager quits under fire

By Frank E. Lockwood
Times-News writer

TWIN FALLS — Twin Falls County Fair Secretary-Manager Cindy Demoney quit her job Wednesday, less than 24 hours after Fair Board members demanded her resignation.

The Twin Falls County Fair and Rodeo Board, meeting in executive session for its annual personnel review, cast a unanimous vote of no confidence in Demoney.

Demoney was placed on immediate leave with pay, and told her to step down by 3 p.m. Wednesday — or be terminated. Demoney will be paid for the rest of September, and will be allowed to remain at her fairgrounds residence until Oct. 31.

Fair Board Chairman Terry Cummins said board members are looking for "a different direction, a different approach" from the next fair manager.

Board members heard complaints from community members about management of the fair and fairgrounds, Cummins said.

Lorrie Kruse presented county commissioners with petitions seeking Demoney's removal. About 300 residents had signed the petitions, according to

Idaho siege puts focus on FBI lab

The Washington Post

WASHINGTON — The FBI, already grappling with a probe of possible criminal misconduct by senior bureau officials in the Ruby Ridge incident, Wednesday acknowledged that the Justice Department is investigating complaints that workers in the FBI's crime lab have offered misleading or fabricated evidence in a number of major criminal cases.

The allegations were made by supervisory special agent Frederic Whitehurst, who has complained to his FBI superiors that lab work has been sloppy and that in some cases conclusions were altered to help the government's case. He aired some of his concerns publicly on Aug. 14 as a witness in a New York bombing conspiracy case, and now is being sought as a defense witness in the O.J. Simpson murder trial in an attempt by Simpson's lawyers to cast doubt on the quality of laboratory analysis the FBI performed in the case.

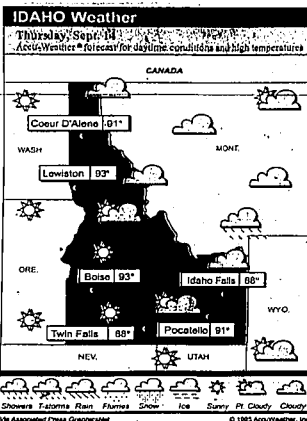

The FBI Wednesday said it was taking Whitehurst's allegations seriously. But in a statement, the bureau said it has recently reviewed lab work in more than 250 cases and "to date the FBI has found no evidence of tampering, evidence fabrication, or failure to report exculpatory evidence."

Any finding of such misconduct will result in tough and swift action by the FBI.

The FBI release does not address specific

Idaho weather summary

A dry weather pattern persisted across Idaho Wednesday, as a large ridge of high pressure over the western United States continued the pattern of dry and sunny weather across the Gem State.
 Temperatures were generally in the upper 70s to upper 80s at midday as readings warmed from morning lows in the 30s and 40s at many low elevation locations. Minimum marks in mountain areas were near or below freezing level as well, following a trend across the entire West.
 Winds were light across the entire state.
 Although a few clouds developed over the mountain ranges of central and southern Idaho, there were no reports of rainfall from any reporting station around the entire state.
 Summer will fade into autumn with the arrival of the equinox on Sept. 23, when the sun crosses the equator and days and nights are of equal length.

Escape

 to the Magic Valley from a Colorado federal prison where he was doing time for robbing a New Mexico bank and trying to steal guns from the Blue Lakes Sporting Goods Store in Twin Falls.
 Martin had been considered an otherwise model inmate in the Santa Fe Jail, where he had reportedly escaped three times. Once, he wooed a female guard into helping him and another man break through the roof. Sedillo said.
 When he escaped Monday, Martin was in Burley jail waiting to testify in the Twin Falls County case against Jack David Peel, who is charged with murder solicitation.
 In both Twin Falls and Mini-Cassia, jail officials knew Martin was a security risk but placed him in a normal cell block with five other inmates. Last week, Twin Falls County Jail was too crowded to place him alone in segregation, said Lt. Bill Thompson of the Twin Falls County Jail.

 Wiseman was in jail awaiting trial in connection with a 1994 armed robbery of Smith's Food and Drug in Burley, and is wanted in Kentucky, Indiana, Ohio and Utah on armed robbery charges.
 Wiseman also is charged with robbing Swensen's grocery store at gunpoint in Rupert in August 1994 after locking employees in a freezer.
 Martin accepted money from Peel in the Twin Falls County Jail to ensure that Peel's ex-girlfriend was killed, said Twin Falls County Prosecutor Richard Bevan.
 Peel's ex-girlfriend is probably not in danger, Bevan said. Martin sent part of the "bribe" money to his parents in Santa Fe.
 "He is doing essentially what he has been doing all along, scamming people," Bevan said. "Because if he didn't take (Peel's) money, someone else would." Peel is charged with kidnapping the ex-girlfriend last September, then shooting her in her arm as she tried to flee. That trial begins on Halloween. Once Martin is rearrested, Bevan will refile the charge of murder solicitation against Peel, Bevan said.

 U.S. Marshal James Benham in Boise said Wednesday his office is assisting investigators in efforts to find Martin and Wiseman and help investigate the escape.
 According to Crystal, investigators are looking into a lead that the men may have been headed toward Pocatello.
 Bannock County Deputy Prosecutor Mark Murphy, where Wiseman faced multiple criminal charges last year, said Wiseman has several friends in Pocatello.

Rancher

 "I think it's bull," he said. "There's things they're saying there that I know they didn't."
 The agents said they kept their tape a secret in case they needed it to defend themselves in court. It only became available to the public after they closed their investigation earlier this summer without finding the bullet or determining who shot the wolf.
 The transcript shows a foul-mouthed Hussey ready to brawl when the agents presented him with the warrant.
 "Here. Take it. This is your copy sir," agent Steve Magone told Hussey as he walked across a stream to hand Hussey his warrant.
 "I don't have to take a (expletive) thing. Only from the goddamn sheriff," Hussey replied. "Nobody's doing a (expletive) thing 'til he gets here."
 At that point Hussey was tossing rocks at Magone.

"Don't hit me with rocks, Gene," Magone said. He carried the recorder in his coat pocket and on the tape rocks could be heard hitting the ground.
 "I can hit you on my (expletive) property. Goddamn you," Hussey said.
 On Tuesday, Hussey admitted throwing a rock but, "I tossed the rock slow-nitch. I've got arthritis in my arm. I can't toss overhead."
 The tape shows the agents at times became rattled as they tried to calm Hussey down. At one point agent Paul Weyland chided Hussey about the possibility that his ranch is subsidized by the federal government.
 "You live in the United States. You know, if you don't like this why don't you move to Russia. Why don't you move your butt to Russia?" Weyland said.
 Hussey said it was Weyland who riled him.

 "He was the lipper," the rancher said Tuesday. "When a guy calls me a subsidized farmer, I'm abused verbally."
 Riley said Weyland said those things to distract Hussey from attacking Magone, who was standing nearest the rancher.
 "Paul knew this was being taped," Magone said Tuesday. "He was trying to distract Hussey from swinging at me."
 But the transcript also shows there were lighter moments during the roughly 15-minute exchange. At some points the men laughed together and talked about constitutional law and federal policy while waiting for the sheriff before continuing the investigation.
 Tempers flared again after the sheriff arrived. But at that time Magone had turned the tape recorder off.

Nuclear

 is jeopardizing national security.
 Justice Department attorney John Bryson told the panel that the court ban on new shipments "keeps the Navy from carrying out a vital part of its defense mission" because it is delaying the refueling of the nuclear aircraft carrier USS Nimitz and the defueling and inactivation of a nuclear cruiser and five nuclear submarines.
 The Navy claims it needs to dump 12 shipments of waste at the INEL immediately, followed shortly by another 12 to keep those activities on schedule.
 But state Deputy Attorney General Nicholas Krema claimed it was proper to keep the court ban on new shipments in place pending a resolution of the state's challenge to the federal conclusion that more waste could safely be dumped at the INEL.
 And after the panel took the issue under advisement, Krema pointed out that when a federal judge in that case castigated the bureau for exhibiting "a callous disregard for the rights of

Fair

 Twin Falls County Commissioner Dennis Maughan.
 In a letter to The Times-News, Kruse described the fair management as "uncooperative, surly and sometimes just downright rude to exhibitors, participants, civic organizations, employees and volunteers."
 Board members were also concerned about the loss of two major events — the Idaho High School Rodeo and the Miss Rodeo Idaho competition.
 The high school rodeo left Filer in 1994 after nearly 20 summers there, and Miss Rodeo Idaho is relocating in 1996 after nearly 30 years at the Twin Falls County Fair.
 Miss Rodeo Idaho officials said there had been complaints about the way the contestants' parents were treated at the competition. And high school rodeo supporters complained about the fair's management.

But all the reviews weren't negative. In 1993, The Los Angeles Times ranked the Filer fair among the nation's Top 10 rural festivals.
 The board is searching for Demoney's replacement and hopes to fill the post within the next 60 days.
 Demoney, a Buhl native, had managed the fair since 1989, earning about $25,000 in her last year.
 Wednesday, she expressed bitterness. "I just really enjoyed working with the people and getting to know the people I got to work with," she said.
 As for the future, Demoney says she plans to take some vacation to "give myself time to think and make good decisions."
 Twin Falls County Commissioner Dennis Maughan said he said that Demoney must go. But the fair needs "a new direction with a person that can handle the public relations skills that this job needs."

Lab

 cases raised by Whitehurst.
 The quality of the FBI's laboratory work also came under harsh criticism in an independent Justice Department task force review of the Ruby Ridge case, in which the conduct of senior bureau officials is under scrutiny by federal prosecutors.
 The report cited problems with the FBI lab one of many impediments in the government's prosecution of Idaho white separatist Randy Weaver for the 1992 murder of a U.S. marshal. Weaver was acquitted of the charge in a case severely hampered by lack of FBI cooperation, the task force found.
 Shortcomings in the FBI lab's work were an issue in the Ruby Ridge controversy and part of the reason a federal judge in that case castigated the bureau for exhibiting "a callous disregard for the rights of the defendants and the interests of justice."

 The judge, Edward Lodge, made that finding after the acquittal of Weaver.
 Prosecutors in the Weaver case expressed disappointment in the FBI's lab work and eventually hired private experts in shooting reconstruction, wound ballistics and metal detection.
 The prosecutors told the Justice Department task force that the FBI lab was "unwilling or unable to provide assistance" in those areas of expertise. Yet the task force found that "nothing more" by the independent examiners fell outside the FBI's expertise.
 In reviewing the FBI lab's work in the Ruby Ridge case, a Justice Department task force said that its performance was "typical of high profile homicide cases involving the death of a federal law enforcement officer and two citizens (Vicki and Sammy Weaver), we wonder about the response to matters of less importance."

Plump may be pleasing, but study says it's not healthy

BOSTON (AP) — Being even a little bit plump is bad for your health, a major new study of American women found.

Health experts have long recognized the hazards of true obesity, but the new research from Harvard Medical School suggests that even love handles are a bad thing. Indeed, within reason, it appears that thinner is always better.

"It's a fairly simple message," said Dr. JoAnn E. Manson, who directed the study. "Even mild to moderate overweight is associated with a substantial risk of premature death."

Federal weight guidelines, which have been criticized as too liberal, say women over age 35 who are 5-foot-5 can safely weigh between 126 and 162 pounds. But the new research suggests that anything over 119 is too much.

In fact, at middle age, the average American woman — 5-foot-5, between 150 and 160 pounds — runs a 30 percent higher risk of death than that of someone her height who weighs less than 120, Manson and her colleagues conclude.

The lowest death rate is among women who are at least 15 percent below the average weight for people their height, Manson said.

Manson cautioned that the new data should not encourage people to abandon common sense and become anorexic thin. And smoking to stay thin is clearly a bad gamble, since skinny smokers have an increased risk of death.

The researchers estimate that, when it comes to blame for one-quarter of all deaths among middle-aged women, if the findings apply equally to men — and the researchers believe they probably do — that adds up to 300,000 weight-related deaths annually in the United States.

Manson said this makes weight second only to cigarette smoking as a cause of untimely deaths among Americans.

Are you?

Do you weigh more than what's good for you? It depends on your body-mass index.

A study in today's New England Journal of Medicine concludes that thinner is usually better. But figuring out where you stand requires calculating a single number so that those with different heights can be compared.

This number, called the body-mass index, is your weight in kilograms divided by the square of your height in meters.

Here's how you figure it out: First, multiply your weight in pounds by .45 to get kilograms. Next, convert your height to inches. Multiply this number by .0254 to get meters. Multiply that number by itself. Then divide this into your weight in kilograms.

Your answer will probably be a number in the 20s or low 30s. It is your body-mass index.

The study found that middle-aged women whose body-mass indexes were below 19 had the lowest risk of death.

For an index between 19 and 24.9, it was 20 percent higher.

Between 25 and 29.9, it was 30 percent higher.

Between 30 and 34.9, it was 80 percent higher.

Over 35, it was double.

Source: The Associated Press

The report suggests that weight kills largely by increasing the risk of heart attacks and cancer, especially cancer of the colon, uterus and breast. In the study, nearly one-third of the cancer deaths among the middle-aged women were due to being overweight.

"This is a good study that demonstrates Americans have an even bigger problem than they thought they did," said Dr. Theodore Vantallie of Columbia University.

The report, published in today's issue of the New England Journal of Medicine, was based on the Nurses' Health Study, which has followed 115,195 women nurses since 1976.

The new work challenges the belief, held by some, that very lean people die sooner than those who have more average builds. Some earlier research found that when mortality figures are put on a chart, they follow a J-shaped curve. In other words, the death rate is a bit elevated for the thinnest folks, drops and levels off for ordinary-size people and then climbs steeply as people approach obesity.

The new study concludes that the hook on the J is a mistake. The only reason very thin people appear to have a somewhat higher risk is that they are more likely to smoke or to have illnesses that made them lose weight. When only healthy nonsmokers are followed over time, the thinnest live the longest.

Of course, death is rare among middle-aged women, no matter what their size. In this study, there were just under four deaths for each 1,000 participants each year. However, the researchers believe that the health risks of being overweight will become even more pronounced as the women get older.

In this study, the researchers found that the death rate for a 5-foot-5 woman is lowest if she weighs below 120. If she weighs 120 to 149, the risk of death rises 20 percent. It is 30 percent higher than that of the thinnest women for those who weigh 150 to 169, and it was 60 percent higher for those who weigh 160 to 175. For women this height who weigh over 175, the risk of death is double that of the thinnest women.

Senate move keeps aid for some children intact

'If you believe that ... you believe in the tooth fairy.'

— Sen. Pete Domenici, R-N.M., on an effort to stop single mothers from having children by limiting aid reform of our welfare system ... We're going to continue to encourage them to improve this bill ... but we're getting closer."

But conservative Republican Sen. Phil Gramm of Texas, one of Dole's rivals for the presidential nomination, said Wednesday's vote marks "the unraveling of our consensus" on welfare. "It puts a lot of us in the position of trying to decide what we want to do."

Speaking against Domenici's amendment Wednesday, Dole warned lawmakers that "if we don't deal with out-of-wedlock births then we're really not dealing with welfare reform."

Dole, R-Kan., added the family cap to his welfare bill late last week, heeding the demands of Senate conservatives and forces in the Christian right, who have made reducing illegitimate births one of their priorities. But his decision angered the GOP's moderate wing.

Addressing the Senate late Tuesday, Domenici said he did not want on his conscience a vote for a welfare bill that says to teen-agers:

WASHINGTON (AP) — Heeding warnings that a national welfare "family cap" would drive up abortions and punish poor families, the Senate defeated a conservative push Thursday to deny additional cash payments to single mothers who have more children.

Twenty Republicans sided with every Democrat as the Senate approved an amendment by Sen. Pete Domenici, 66-34, to strip a family cap policy from the Republican blueprint to overhaul the nation's welfare programs.

Conservatives said the government, if it is ever going to bring down the rising rates of illegitimate births, must stop subsidizing the "reckless, irresponsible" behavior of single women who ask taxpayers to support their children.

But GOP moderates and Democrats said there was no evidence to suggest that slicing a small amount from a family's welfare check would discourage poor women from having children out of wedlock. "If you believe that ... you believe in the tooth fairy. It just isn't going to happen," said Domenici, R-N.M., while warning that the family cap could increase abortions and add to the misery of the poor.

The family cap has divided Republicans as Bob Dole, the Senate's majority leader and top contender for the GOP presidential nomination, tries to win approval for his long legislation to turn responsibility for welfare over to the states, cut spending by $70 billion, and require recipients to go to work.

Dole has said he hopes to pass the bill, the centerpiece of the GOP's social agenda, by Thursday. Several issues remain to be settled, among them demands that spending on child care be dramatically increased.

The White House applauded the passage of Domenici's amendment. "It does by no means satisfy all the president's concerns," said White House spokesman Mike McCurry, "but they are beginning to move this legislation in the direction of real

"Maybe you ought to get an abortion ... Can we really believe that with the problems that teen-agers are having, and the societal mix-up they find themselves in, that cash benefits are going to keep them from getting pregnant?" he added. "I cannot believe it. Frankly, there is no evidence of that."

Domenici also argued that at a time when the Senate is moving to give states maximum flexibility to experiment with welfare reform, it is wrong to impose such mandates on governors and legislatures. Conservative strings, he said, are no better than liberal ones.

Under his amendment, however, states could still choose to adopt a family cap policy, as a dozen have done already.

But Sen. Lauch Faircloth, R-N.C., countered that a national policy was necessary.

One-third of all children are now born to unmarried mothers, and some predictions suggest that half of all births may be out of wedlock within the next decade.

"Only by ending such the perverse cash incentive to have children out of wedlock can we hope to slow the increase in out-of-wedlock births, and ultimately end welfare dependency," Faircloth said.

The House, which passed its welfare overhaul in March, included a family cap. Under the bill, families affected by the loss of cash would be instead provided with vouchers to purchase diapers, formula and other necessities to care for their newborn children.

Clinton meets with Dalai Lama

WASHINGTON (AP) — President Clinton met Wednesday with the Dalai Lama in a gesture of respect for the exiled Buddhist leader who won the Nobel Peace Prize for his nonviolent advocacy of self-rule for Tibet.

As he has done the past two years, Clinton dropped by briefly as the Dalai Lama met at the White House with Vice President Al Gore.

"The president and the vice president lauded the Dalai Lama's resolve, consistent commitment to nonviolence and his pragmatic approach to negotiations with China," a White House statement said.

"The low-key nature of the meeting appeared intended to avoid putting a deeper strain on U.S.-Chinese relations, already chilled by disputes over human rights, trade and Beijing's export of missile technology. China considers Tibet part of its territory."

Clinton expressed concern for the preservation of Tibetan religion and culture, the White House said.

Right to silence has long legacy

WASHINGTON (AP) — More than 350 years after John Lilburne was whipped and put to death for refusing to take an oath before testifying, his legacy lives on in the O.J. Simpson courtroom and the Ruby Ridge inquiry.

The history books say the Englishman's later incarceration in a nool of the right against self-incrimination, carried forward from the mother country into the U.S. Constitution.

This week, the FBI sniper who killed the wife of white separatist Randy Weaver at Ruby Ridge, Idaho, three years ago invoked his Fifth Amendment rights before a Senate hearing.

Last week, retired Los Angeles Police Detective Mark Fuhrman fell silent on the same constitutional grounds in the Simpson murder trial.

Both engaged in a form of stonewalling sanctioned in one way or another since the ebbing of torture and rough justice, and enshrined in the Bill of Rights.

Those who have taken the Fifth include assorted mobsters, scores of witnesses in Sen. Joseph McCarthy's communist-hunting hearings in the 1950s, Oliver North in the Iran-Contra affair and Michael Jackson in court documents concerning a child-molestation lawsuit. Its use invariably taints the user with the presumption of guilt in the public's mind, even though jurors are instructed not to think that way.

In crime-fearing times like these, "It's probably the most disliked and criticized of all the provisions in the Bill of Rights," said Yale Kamisar, criminal law professor at the University of Michigan.

But, of course, he added, "It all depends on whose ox is being gored."

In the McCarthy hearings, witnesses were branded "Fifth Amendment communists" by the senator and saw their reputations destroyed even if their refusal to testify against themselves avoided convictions.

In legal articles, prosecution circles and from the bench, "The Fifth Amendment has been battered severely for many years, and it's getting worse and worse," said Kamisar, who believes the criticism is overblown.

"The problem is that people are just fed up with crime and the justice system," he said. People are "not interested in rights as a general proposition."

Lilburne was said to have invoked the privilege in 1637 and its use took hold in British common law the following century as Parliament moved to stop Star Chamber tribunals from using torture to make witnesses talk.

The scope of America's Fifth Amendment, which guarantees no one "shall be compelled in any criminal case to be a witness against himself," was expanded with little controversy during its first 100 years.

This century, it has been used not only to protect the accused in a criminal case, but for witnesses in congressional or administrative investigations who might later be charged in a criminal proceeding.

That element came into play when FBI agent Lon Horiuchi, facing potential criminal charges in the shooting of Weaver's wife, refused to testify to the Senate subcommittee investigating the 1992 Ruby Ridge standoff.

Fuhrman took the Fifth when questioned about the truthfulness of his earlier testimony and whether he had ever planted evidence.

Opponents of the Fifth's use say that with the days of torture over and many safeguards in place for defendants, the amendment is a relic used to win leniency or immunity when it doesn't merit a case altogether.

That argument goes back at least to William Howard Taft, president and chief justice of the Supreme Court in the early 1900s. It's been heard many times since, notably when North and other Iran-Contra figures took the Fifth and critics howled.

North's conviction on three felony counts in the arms-for-hostages scandal was overturned on appeal.

In 1992, when three Democratic congressmen refused to testify about abuses in operations of the House post office, criminal defense lawyer Ralph Drury Martin applauded.

Any such testimony "presents a terrible risk and no corresponding benefit," he wrote in Legal Times. "Deliberate false statements, as well as honest mistakes, contradictions and lapses of memory, become land mines in the record, ready to explode."

For example, he said Federal Judge Walter Nixon of Mississippi was vindicated on charges of taking a gratuity but convicted and impeached based on a rambling answer before a grand jury.

The damning comments came in response to the question: "Do you have anything else you want to add, judge?"

Man found guilty in race-based killing

LUBBOCK, Texas (AP) — An all-white jury took just an hour today to find a black man guilty of a drive-by slaying that officials and many in the community saw as resulting from racial hatred.

The jury found Ryan Keith Moody guilty of murder and immediately began hearing testimony about punishment. Moody faces up to 99 years in prison and a $10,000 fine.

Groups warn of life's many hidden risks

WASHINGTON (AP) — Consumer groups unveiled a new primer of peril Wednesday, a brochure designed to help Americans identify and avoid dangers they might have overlooked.

"Hidden Hazards Number Two," is the second 10-item menu of menace compiled by the Coalition for Consumer Health and Safety and offered free by the group, which is made up of insurance, public-interest and consumer organizations.

This year's record of risks ranges from alcohol-drug interactions to smokeless tobacco to low-fat desserts.

Low-fat desserts? This is right. "Nonfat" desserts are not necessarily nonfattening," warned James Edwards of CUNA Mutual Insurance Group.

Many people mistake low-fat for low-calorie, he said. But often low-fat or fat-free foods pack plenty of sugar calories. The low-fat label can mislead dieters, causing them to binge on these foods, he said.

And washing those tasty muffins down with a glass of water may not be as safe as people would hope either.

The parasitic cryptosporidium can survive chlorine and many filtration systems, potentially threatening millions of people. In 1993 thousands were sickened in Milwaukee by this hazard.

Lisa Ragin of the National Association of People with AIDS said individuals with weak immune systems are most at risk, though anyone can be sickened by the parasite. She recommended boiling water, using special filters or buying certain bottled water for people at risk.

Sheri Watson of the American Lung Association warned of the dangers of carbon monoxide from stoves and heaters, while Mary Ellen Fise of the Consumer Federation of America noted the hazards of the interaction of alcohol and medications — even common items such as aspirin.

Other hidden hazards discussed in the new brochure include unsafe installation of child safety seats in cars, guns in the home, falls by the elderly, smokeless tobacco, new strains of AIDS and the dangers of older cribs.

Each listing describes the hazard and discusses how to avoid the danger. Consumers can obtain a copy of the brochure by sending a stamped, self-addressed envelope to Hidden Hazards, C.F.A., P.O. Box 12099, Washington, D.C., 20005-0099.

A few copies also remain of the first edition of Hidden Hazards, issued two years ago. It discussed baby walkers, bicycle helmets, sport utility vehicle rollovers, seat belts, infant drownings, playground falls, food poisoning, secondhand smoke, alcohol abuse and sexually transmitted diseases.

Grenade attack

U.S. Embassy in Moscow hit by grenade; no one injured

The Washington Post

MOSCOW — A rocket-propelled grenade fired by an unknown assailant smashed into the sixth floor of the U.S. Embassy in downtown Moscow Wednesday, prompting the evacuation of hundreds of employees stunned by the explosion.

The grenade penetrated the ornate embassy wall and was stopped by a large copying machine, the embassy said in a statement. There were no injuries, perhaps because no one was in the copying room at the time of the blast.

About a half-hour later, authorities found a portable grenade launcher in the archway of a courtyard entrance directly across the 12-lane avenue from the embassy, about 100 yards from the point of impact. A face mask, a glove and a three-foot-long paper bag, that could have been used to conceal the weapon were also found at the site, the embassy said.

"I was on the phone with someone at the time and I said, 'Oh my God, we've been bombed!'" embassy spokesman Richard Hoagland said.

The grenade, which struck the 10-story embassy with a resounding boom, mangled the copying machine, scorched a portion of the embassy wall and smashed several windows, was fired at 4:25 p.m. Moscow time from across one of Moscow's busiest and broadest boulevards. In addition to the heavy presence of Russian and U.S. embassy guards on duty at that hour, there are nearly always Russian traffic policemen in the immediate area as well as hundreds of motorists.

The grenade attack came a day before U.S. Deputy Secretary of State Strobe Talbott is due in Moscow to discuss increasingly strident Russian denunciations of the U.S.-led NATO bombing campaign against the Bosnian Serbs.

A Russian television anchorman speculated Wednesday night that the incident may have been somehow related to tough criticism of U.S. and Western policy on Bosnia by President Boris Yeltsin, and other Russian officials. On Tuesday, a Russian Foreign Ministry spokesman said the NATO bombing threatens the Serbs with "genocide."

But embassy officials said they had received no warnings or threats before the explosion and that no one had claimed responsibility in the hours following the attack. As of this evening, no arrests had been made.

"This appears to be an isolated incident," Hoagland said. Russian investigators also declined to speculate about the identity or motivation of the perpetrator, other than to guess he may have been deranged.

"This is not a reflection of the relations between our countries. It's the act of a lone maniac," a senior Russian security official told the Associated Press, asking that his name not be used. In the statement, the embassy said it had taken unspecified measures to protect the embassy compound, which includes a number of buildings and hundreds of employees including Russians and Americans.

Russian authorities also stepped up security at U.S. diplomatic missions. A spokesman for the Federal Security Service, the domestic successor agency to the KGB, told the Reuters news agency that security had been tightened at all U.S. diplomatic buildings in the capital as well as at the consulates in St. Petersburg, the Urals city of Yekaterinburg and the Far Eastern port of Vladivostok.

Gore appearance calms tribal leader meeting

WASHINGTON (AP) — Vice President Al Gore made a surprise appearance at a White House meeting of American Indian leaders after scores of them had walked out in anger, claiming top-level administration officials ignored the session.

Gore's appearance soothed the feelings of the tribal leaders who were still there. But they said he did not give them what they were demanding: a promise that President Clinton would veto a cut in federal Indian programs.

The Senate has approved a 15 percent reduction in spending next year on the Bureau of Indian Affairs, a major source of funding for tribal governments and social services. The House has approved a 3 percent cut.

Tribal leaders say the reduction would break century-old treaties in which the U.S. government promised to provide for Indian health and welfare.

About 150 tribal leaders appeared for the private, 26-hour meeting at the Old Executive Office Building, part of the White House complex. Many left midway through. People there gave varying estimates of how many walked out, some saying as many as two-thirds or more.

"I said I have no reason to be here. We came here for hard-core answers," said one who left, Vernon Mestes, a Cheyenne River Sioux tribal council member from South Dakota.

The tribal leaders were "extremely frustrated and very angry," said president of the National Congress of American Indians.

Genocide gains acceptance as society loses morality

In the fall of 1914, the corrupt pashas who ran the tottering Ottoman Empire thought they saw a last chance for salvation.

They allied themselves with Germany and declared war on Russia, sending a million and a half soldiers marching into the mountains of Armenia, which straddled the Turkish-Russian border, just as winter snows began to fall.

A quarter of a million Turks came back in coffins. A quarter of a million grieving mothers were soon in the streets of Constantinople and Ankara, demanding to know why.

It didn't take long for someone to find a convenient scapegoat: Blame the Armenians.

Between April 1915 and the end of World War I, the Turks butchered 1.5 million Armenians and sent as least as many more into exile. Thus was born one of the 20th century's most efficient inventions:

Genocide.

Since then, 170 million people worldwide have perished under similar circumstances. Not in battle or as casualties of war, but through systematic campaigns by governments — and usually the governments of nations of which they were citizens — to exterminate them.

R.J. Rummel, a professor of political science at the University of Hawaii, has made it his business to count. For all the barbarity that man has inflicted upon man, he says, genocide is a uniquely 20th century phenomenon.

Before 1900, Rummel argues, governments had neither the technology nor the control required to conduct genocide. Killing on a 20th century scale requires mass communication, an efficient state-security apparatus and a capacity to manipulate old prejudices and new fears.

The word itself was not coined until 1944, a year in which genocide claimed 11 million victims in Eastern Europe, Germany and China alone.

It's a notion with which the world has never really come to terms. It's simply not within the experience of most people to understand why a Bosnian Serb militiaman would wear a necklace of Muslim eyeballs.

Should the United Nations or a tribunal of outraged nations undertake to hang him from the nearest lamp post? Or does that simply represent an escalation of mindless hate?

In the aftermath of World War II and the Nuremberg Trials, justice seemed powerful enough to conquer most of the evils that men do. It turns out we underestimated evil's clout.

We also underestimated the powerful appeal of tribalism in this age of disappearing borders in an ever-shrinking world. We failed to appreciate the hypnotic appeal of buried grudges and long-repressed hate to people frightened by change.

Maybe the explanation lies in the nature of this amazing century, when limitations with which humankind had lived for a million years have been shattered. If man could take flight and then reach for the stars, then why couldn't his demons?

Hannah Arendt, who used the term, "banality of evil" to describe Hitler and his henchmen, conjectured that the combination of opportunity and power on an unprecedented scale were simply irresistible to men and cultures that were morally bankrupt.

Maybe Stalin, responsible for perhaps 18 million murders, mostly of Soviet citizens, said it best. When he was warned that Pope Pius XII might disapprove of his invasion of Poland, Stalin replied:

"How many divisions has the pope?"

In this century, never enough.

Some fair costs unnecessary

This is an open letter to the Twin Falls County Commissioners and the Twin Falls County Fair Board. In the past, I have seen complaints about the cost of the fair. I am a resident of Twin Falls and I have seen the fair grounds to see scheduled events when tickets were purchased in advance, also having to pay twice to park if you leave the fair and return. It makes me wonder, when will you have to pay twice to re-enter the fairgrounds?

These may be petty issues to you, yet I believe that, if I may speak for a good portion of Twin Falls and surrounding areas, these charges are unnecessary. Also, it seems the fair gets more and more expensive every year and the rides, exhibits and animal barns get less and less.

I am sure that most of the profits go to grounds improvements — at least I hope so. So could I make a suggestion? Why couldn't some of our money go to a new entrance to the rodeo arena for people who have advance tickets? On the other hand, I would like to also thank you for doing your jobs so well to make the fair possible every year. I am sure it's not an easy job. And the biggest thanks of all goes to whoever got Kansas to come put on such a great show. Even though delayed, I would have waited all night. I only hope next year you will consider us non-country fans again, especially since the turnout to Kansas was bigger, and going to both shows myself. It was by far a better show.

Constitution has God in mind

I was told that the signers of the Declaration of Independence and creators of the Constitution only did so for greed and self-interest. Right? Let's look at the facts.

If they wanted to spread greed and self-interest, they would've sided with the British, where it was safe in numbers. When they signed that declaration, they knew it meant certain death, but they chose that instead of sitting in their comfort zone as many people do these days.

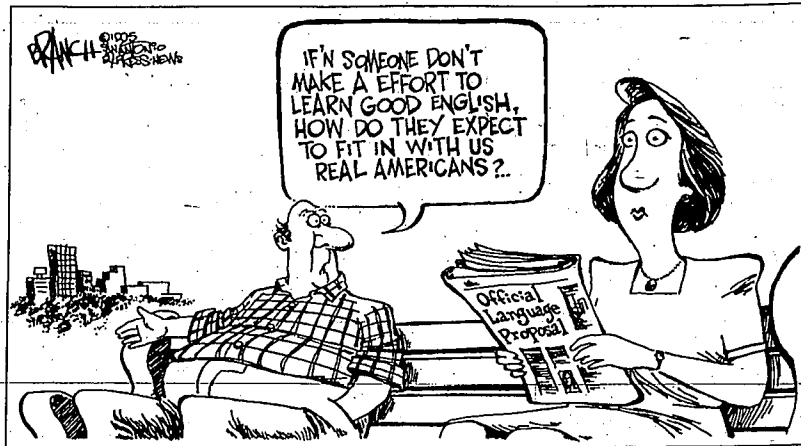

Five signers were later tortured to death; two found their sons arrested or killed; 12 found their homes destroyed; nine died fighting alongside of the lowly peasants in the war. Carter Braxton's wealth was taken; he was forced to sell his farm and died in rage. Thomas McKean's family was hounded, and he died in poverty. The properties of Ellery, Clymer, Hall, Walton, Gwinnett, Heyward, Rutledge and Middleton were destroyed.

Thomas Nelson died bankrupt. Francis Lewis' home and property was destroyed. John Hart was driven from his dying wife, never saw his children again and died of a broken heart. Morris and Livingston had similar fates. The surviving signers knew what it was like to be humble, meek and poverty-ridden like the peasants they fought alongside of. Thus, they created the Constitution with God in mind.

This is the true definition of patriotism. These men loved their fellowmen and their God-given rights they cherished. They willingly faced the sacrifice with true courage (something almost unheard of these days with so-called "Americans" covering in their comfort zones).

Local performers deserve praise

Because I have frequently been criticized for my enthusiastic support of our local musical and theatrical performances, I should explain that I enjoy watching amateurs perform more than professionals because, while the professional is paid to give a slick and unflawed performance, the amateur is rewarded only by the applause of an appreciative audience. I got a special kick out of seeing local people struggle to shed their inhibitions and get on a stage and perform a role completely out of character.

I've seen "Annie, Get Your Gun" performed locally at least three times and have enjoyed each production equally well. When I saw the recent show, I was particularly impressed with Rich Bevan, whom I watched grow from a grade-school kid to our local prosecuting attorney without ever imagining him performing on the stage. Although he certainly has the physique and features to play an authentic Indian, I was pleasantly surprised to see him play the role of Chief Sitting Bull with such humor and vitality.

I don't mean to imply that he was better than the rest of the cast. I wasn't surprised that veterans Gary Dalton and Matt Frantz were excellent in their roles as Frank Butler and Charlie Davenport. Sara Bradshaw, a student of Carson Wong, was delightful as the naive, beautiful sharpshooter who wins Frank's heart.

Newcomer Tom Poole was a convincing Buffalo Bill. Angie Peterson and all the other members of the supporting cast did a great job.

Irving Berlin's wonderful music was handled well by Dennis McCracken who, with his wife, Robin, and Mike Winterholler, ably directed this thoroughly entertaining musical evening.

Why is 'N' word so offensive?

All right, enough is enough. Is there anyone else out there who doesn't think the "N word" is the most foul in the English language? When did it replace the "F word"?

It hasn't been long ago that the "N" word was used in the same way African-American is used today. It wasn't considered derogatory. It's still unclear why it's now taken that way, since it doesn't mean anything like murder, the "F word" (and its common reference to mother), torturer nor rapist. As far as I'm concerned, it simply means a low-class African-American.

Just because members of that race don't like it, it doesn't change the meaning. At one time, they were insulted to be called "black." Then they preferred it for a while, and now again they're rejecting it. Perhaps if they insisted they be called the "N word," it would again lose its meaning.

At any rate, I find it appalling that there is no offense expressed at invoking the name of God or Jesus Christ in anger or exclamation during catastrophes. Where is the outrage at the use of language against God, to whom we owe our very existence? Unlike man, he never does stupid things, but we've allowed his name to be corrupted with many an admonition, discouragement or law. Sad.

Preserve nature now for future

Regarding Jack Streeter's letter discussing the speakers on Aug. 25 at Givens Hot Springs: I wish I'd been there to defend the environmentalist point of view.

I have seen "private property rights" and "people first" and "economy first" policies wreak havoc in both Texas and Idaho. In Austin, Texas, greedy, short-sighted developers have almost succeeded in destroying a beautiful, irreplaceable spring that has drawn people to the town for hundreds of years. Even though the people there voted in a special ordinance to protect it, the powerful few went above the people's heads and bought a few legislators so they could do what they wanted.

McCall used to be a pretty little town with plenty of room for everyone to go and enjoy Payette Lake and the Boise River. McCall was "Californicated." It's had bad zoning with big ugly houses too close together. Lake-front and river-front property was snapped up and "privatized." Now it's hard for native Idahoans to enjoy the lake or river near McCall. More generosity to the public and some long-term environmental planning could have helped McCall stay beautiful. Can't we create jobs without encouraging that kind of growth?

Also, a basic biological tenet is that the survival of people depends on the survival of other species. Humans are already depleting species without knowing what the (possibly catastrophic) consequences may be. The oceans are suffering a depletion of shrimp, the populations of frogs worldwide are declining and destruction of tropical rain forests is unleashing new strains of viruses. Maybe we ought to take a 20-year "breather" before decimating any more species.

One thing's for sure — if we want to preserve some of nature's fragile beauty for future generations of the American public, some people will have to be told "no" now.

TV makes simpletons of us all

The roads we travel go in many directions. Some good, some not so good, some happy and some gloomy. Shouldn't we determine or designate the roads we will travel with our destinies left to the hands of God? In many ways, it appears there is another force trying to control our destinies, a medium known to us as the television — a more fitting name, "Boob Tube." It certainly has made simpletons out of many of us.

Little do most of us know or realize the full impact this one electronic gadget has upon our destinies. Its programming goes far beyond any of our thoughts and realizations of what is good or bad for our daily lives. How have we let it gain control of our daily lives the way it has is unbelievable. We acknowledge it is capable of influencing the behaviors attitudes of our children. If it's capable of having such a force upon our kids, why isn't it just as likely to have the same effects on we adults?

Take, for example, the Simpson trial and all its replays before and after its daily showing. If its unmitigated weck, not just the national audiences but worldwide audiences as well are being brainwashed. Will Los Angeles, Philadelphia, Detroit or South Africa go up in smoke if a verdict reached by the jury is not favorable to some? The TV programming is sure putting together the matches to light these fires. The introduction and all the replays of one word, the "N" word, an epithet repeated over and over by an inflated, pompous shyster trying to impress the world. TV audiences all over the world listened while he spewed forth his venom.

I, like millions, grew up with this world. We all knew what it meant and to whom it was directed. We didn't need a lawyer to explain it or blow it out of proportion when using the word. I have in my household a few dictionaries — a couple of Webster's, Reader's Digest, Encyclopedia Britannica, to name a few. They don't make me a brain trust or a space cadet. I do know I can go to any one of them and in the "N" section, there is the word. It is not capitalized or given any special fanfare. Each volume does say the word is offensive. We lived with it; why should today's society be any different?

Keep freedom: Be informed

The Vietnam War was called a police action. Today they won't admit we're in another war where promotions are given to government police for committing mass murder.

In almost every election over the past 40 years, someone has called for a constitutional convention, but the people stop them every time. Rockefeller said a small window of opportunity is opening around the year 2000 to impose the One World Government. For our government to accomplish that goal, it has to take over our Constitution, so Gov. Levin of Utah drew up legislation called the Conference of States. This is a way to force Congress to call a constitutional convention. The day they open the Constitution is the day you can say goodbye to your freedom.

But Gov. LeVitt said, "The Conference of States legislation is failing because of all those private militia groups out there." In other words, we get to keep our Constitution a few more months and put off the escalation of this war a few more months "because of all those private militia." Those are Gov. LeVitt's words. He didn't say "because you refused to get out of your comfort zone and make yourself informed."

I don't know if we can avoid an escalation of this war. We're coming into an election year, the Congress knows it won't be re-elected if it passes bills stealing our rights. If the anti-terrorism bill is stopped, there could be a repeat of the Oklahoma bombing. They must convince the people we need this bill. Watch the news about the eastern terrorist leader the government supposedly caught and is sending back to Israel. The terrorist group, "Hamas," has said, "If they send him to Israel, America will pay." Is this cover for another bombing so they can scare the people into thinking they need this anti-terrorism bill? They tried to blame the militia for the last bombing and failed.

But we know it couldn't happen here, don't we? They were just kidding when they issued Executive Order Nos. 10995, 10997, 10998, 11000 and on and on. Get these orders and read them; they'll scare the pants off of you.

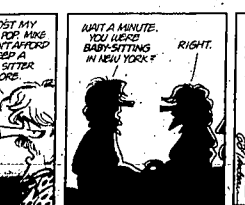

Go to the patriot groups; make yourselves informed. It's the only chance your kids have to grow up as free Americans. As American citizens, you're obligated to make yourselves informed.

Opinion

Truths show Americans what they don't want to see: Reality

A prominent senator reveals in his diaries that he cheerfully barters his influence to lobbyists, and is more preoccupied with his young staffers' breasts than with legislation.

A police officer brags into a tape recorder of racist brutality and abuses of authority, offering accounts so vividly vile it's impossible to believe he could make them all up.

Americans are being force-fed a bitter tonic that is challenging how we view ourselves and our society. The tonic: reality.

We Americans are notoriously self-righteous. It's not enough for us to be principled — we see ourselves as above reproach. It's not enough to triumph over obvious evil — we see ourselves as virtuous personified. We don't just do good — we ARE good.

We don't like being reminded that we aren't perfect, that our judgment might be flawed. We don't like having to question what we've always wanted to believe about ourselves.

So we've become skillful in deluding ourselves, allowing us to maintain our beliefs despite contrary evidence. America is perfect, period.

Anyone who challenges that is a traitor, a whiner, a communist, a professional victim, a subversive.

But a recent flurry of confessions, tape diaries and other disclosures of mischief is disrupting our comfortable self-delusion. The line between the good guys and the bad guys is blurring.

Could some of the stories of police brutality told by suit and pump be accurate? Could accounts of sexual harassment told by distraught women be accurate? Might the politician I considered a fine human being be a jerk after all? Could the America I've etched in clear areas of light and dark in fact be a land of gray?

Robert L. Steinback

The 1971 publication of the Pentagon Papers, revealing the truth about the origins of the Vietnam War, may have been the first important challenge to our tradition of self-delusion.

That trickle of uncut reality today is a torrent. The videotape of Rodney King's beating forced die-hard police defenders to second-guess themselves.

Evangelist Jim Bakker's tearful admission of his financial and sexual transgressions convinced many of his most ardent followers they'd been played for fools.

Former Secretary of Defense Robert S. McNamara's confession of colossal errors in judgment as he guided the Vietnam War effort embarrassed many champions of American might.

The release of damning internal memos from the tobacco industry has forced ardent believers in corporate responsibility and the purity of the marketplace to rethink their gospel.

Will this baptism in reality make us a more determined nation of deniers, rationalizing away even the most unassailable evidence if it challenges our preferred world view?

Or might we turn into a nation of cynics, who will eagerly embrace sordid revelations to prove evil is everywhere and every paranoid fear is justified?

We could, instead, use these sobering dollops of reality to make us keener analysts of our world, teaching us how to be optimistic without being glib. We could learn to see through the ploys of politicians, evangelists and talk-show hosts who promise too-easy formulas to re-create the America of our self-delusions.

Sen. Bob Packwood

We needn't lose our pride in America — we just have to base our pride on our dedication to principle, not on delusions of righteousness. No, we're not perfect, but we're trying damned hard to improve ourselves. No, we haven't eradicated the Mark Fuhrmans and Bob Packwoods, but we're working on it. Reality can't threaten that form of pride.

Troops target Serb-held towns

SARAJEVO, Bosnia-Herzegovina (AP) — Government soldiers and their Croat allies were rapidly advancing on Serb-held towns in central and western Bosnia on Wednesday, sending thousands of Serb civilians fleeing.

The Serbs were offering little resistance and appeared to be pulling back, indicating they were reconciled to losing less important territory. They were likely to lose the land anyway in a possible peace settlement.

NATO also kept up its pressure on Bosnian Serbs, launching airstrikes on Serb-held territory around Sarajevo.

In Washington, Defense Secretary William Perry said he found no evidence of any civilian casualties in more than 100 NATO bombings since Aug. 30. The Russian government has accused NATO of killing Serb civilians, including children.

The advance by Croat and Muslim-led government troops came as U.S. envoy Richard Holbrooke began a new round of shuttle diplomacy to settle on a plan to divide Bosnia's territory.

Holbrooke was likely to tackle the difficult issue in meetings with Serbian President Slobodan Milosevic, who has negotiating power for the Bosnian Serbs. U.S. negotiators were carrying large maps as they entered the talks in Belgrade, the Serbian capital.

Last Friday, all three sides in the U.S. pilots walk the deck of USS America Wednesday during maneuvers in the Adriatic Sea. Bosnian Serbs could expect more attacks from cruise missiles if NATO pilots consider anti-aircraft systems still a threat.

Bosnian conflict agreed on a plan under which the Serbs, who now hold about two-thirds of Bosnia, would have to give up large pieces of it. They would end up with 49 percent, leaving the rest for a Croat-Muslim federation.

Increasingly backed by Russian rhetoric, Serbs are complaining that the NATO campaign is unfair and must be stopped. The airstrikes started on Aug. 30, two days after a mortar shell landed near Sarajevo market and killed 38 people.

The Serbs have refused to pull back heavy weapons from around Sarajevo, the chief demand of the United Nations and NATO, claiming it would leave their forces surrounding the capital vulnerable to government attack.

AP Photographer Sava Radovanovic reported seeing a NATO jet fire four rockets at Serb infantry positions on the front lines near Lukavica, a Serb-held suburb of Sarajevo. NATO sources, who spoke on condition of anonymity, said storage areas for Serb armor and ammunition, not infantry, had been targeted in that attack. Initial reports indicated the targets were hit, the source said.

Bosnian TV reported more strikes Wednesday evening in the same area. It also showed amateur video of a huge plume of black smoke near the town of Doboj, north of Ozren.

U.N. spokeswoman Maj. Myriam Souchet confirmed that there were airstrikes Wednesday near Sarajevo. NATO spokesmen said an ammunition dump was attacked early Wednesday, but could not give the location. A second bombing mission was called off due to bad weather.

Bosnian officials have promised not to take advantage of the airstrikes to attack around Sarajevo. But they were not asked for any such promises elsewhere in Bosnia, and the NATO campaign may have diminished the Bosnian Serbs' ability or willingness to fight.

A senior Bosnian army officer said that NATO destroyed an important Serb communications tower on Ozren last week, and since then there appeared to be little reason for the Serbs to keep fighting for the region.

One NATO spokesman said the bombing campaign had a "pretty heavy impact" on Serb communications, which could affect commanders' ability to coordinate movement of major units.

Belarus downs balloon, killing American crew

MINSK, Belarus (AP) — The Belarussian military shot down an American gas balloon flying in an international race, killing both crew members, officials said Wednesday.

A Belarussian military helicopter approached the balloon and demanded by radio that the two Americans identify themselves. The balloon was shot down after the crew failed to heed radio calls or warning shots, it said.

A second American balloon was forced down, but its crew is safe, the U.S. State Department said.

The shooting occurred Tuesday near an air base and an adjoining missile base near the village of Beryza, close to the Belarussian-Polish border, the U.S. Embassy in Minsk said in a statement.

In Washington, the State Department said American authorities were not notified of the shooting for 24 hours. Spokesman Nicholas Burns called the delay unacceptable.

"We are making very strong, diplomatic protests. In this day in age, in the post-Cold War era, for this type of thing to happen is deeply regrettable," he said.

Burns said the identities of the two men would not be released until relatives had been notified.

An embassy official has gone to the site to recover the bodies and investigate the shooting. The balloonists were taking part in the Gordon Bennett gas balloon competition, a race founded by newspaper magnate James Gordon Bennett and first held in 1906.

Zhirinovsky says woman enjoyed beating

MOSCOW (AP) — Vladimir Zhirinovsky shrugged off criticism Wednesday over his latest brawl on the floor of Russia's parliament, and said the woman he fought with probably enjoyed it.

"Such women dream of being raped but no one was them," the headline-seeking ultranationalist said of fellow lawmaker Yevgenia Tishkovskaya, whom he grabbed by the hair and throat in Saturday's scuffle.

Tishkovskaya said she planned to sue the 49-year-old Zhirinovsky for 100 million rubles ($22,000). She and other lawmakers demanded he be tossed out of the Duma and that criminal proceedings be started against him.

Globetrotters finally lose after 24 years

VIENNA, Austria — The Harlem Globetrotters' 24-year, 8,829-game winning streak is over.

It ended Tuesday night in a 91-85 loss against a team led by Hall of Famer Kareem Abdul-Jabbar, who scored 34 points. It was the Globetrotters' first loss since Jan. 15, 1971, when they lost 100-99 to the New Jersey Nets.

The Globetrotters are currently touring Europe, and are facing Abdul-Jabbar's team in an 11-game series. They won the first two games of the tour, 91-90 in Zurich, Switzerland, on Friday and 58-52 in Halle, Germany, on Saturday.

The 48-year-old Abdul-Jabbar made 15 of 16 shots from the field and former New York Knick Bo Kimble scored 13 points and had eight rebounds.

Vandals give starting QB job to Brian Brennan for now

MOSCOW — Brian Brennan has the starting quarterback job at the University of Idaho — for now.

Vandal coach Chris Tormey announced that Brennan has moved back ahead of Eric Hays in the depth chart. However, Tormey said he would wait until Thursday to name Saturday's starting quarterback, and that both Brennan and Hays will play in the home opener against Sonoma State.

"Brennan's sore throwing arm is 'much better.' He's had a good week of practice," Tormey said. "I think they've both gotten better this past week."

Hays started in Idaho's first game, a 14-7 loss at Oregon State, but Brennan played most of the second half. Brennan replaced Hays as the starter at midseason last year when Hays went down with a knee injury.

Albertson stuffed in CSI home debut

By Karen Baumer
Times-News writer

TWIN FALLS — Pass, set, crush — unless, of course, it starts with an ace.

The College of Southern Idaho volleyball team treated about 400 fans to a killing of the Albertson College Coyotes 15-1, 15-6, 18-16 in its first home match of the year Wednesday.

"I expected from them what they did," said Albertson coach Derek Soderblom about the Golden Eagles. "I just expected us to play better. I don't think our play should change that much by whose on the other side of the net."

But it did, especially in the first game. CSI's Perella Donald started out the match serving 10 points before Albertson ever had a chance to serve.

She racked up three of the team's 13 aces for the night during that stretch. "I thought it was really hard to get into the match," said CSI coach Ben Stroud. "We were fired up and the crowd was fired up and then all we did was serve."

But the easy wins in the first two games gave the Golden Eagle bench a chance to shine too.

"Our second string competed really well," Stroud said. "We had a couple lapses and didn't pass well but they played hard."

Those lapses came after CSI took a 5-1 lead in the third game.

The Coyotes took advantage of three CSI errors and Albertson kill to tie the game.

A Coyote ace and a net violation by CSI put Albertson up 7-5.

From there on the points bounced back and forth until CSI led 12-10. Then the Golden Eagles scored two more to serve for match point.

But a couple of kills by the Coyotes revived them and Albertson scored the next five points to go ahead 15-14.

Lillie Robinson put down two kills for the Golden Eagles to tie the game. A Coyote setting error gave CSI another chance at match point.

Albertson claimed side out on a kill and then tied it with an ace.

The Golden Eagles put away the match, winning the next two points on blocks.

The third game was more balanced, Soderblom said.

But he said that it was hard for his players to play in a rhythm after being shelved so hard in the first two games.

Katiane Simmonetti, who finished the night with eight kills and 10 assists, said the team is starting to play together better.

"There are not as many mistakes," Simmonetti said.

CSI takes its 23-0 record to Spokane, Wash., today to compete in a 6-team tournament.

Stroud expects to see the most competition from Spokane Community College and Highline Community College of Seattle, Wash.

"Those are the two premier teams in the Washington-Oregon area," Stroud said.

Ricks, North Idaho and Olympia, Wash. also will be there.

Players approve deal, but bumps still exist

The Associated Press

CHICAGO — The NBA is back in business. Well, almost.

Player representatives overwhelming approved a six-year contract Wednesday, then passed the ball to the owners, who are expected to give their approval later in the week.

There may still be a few bumps, however. The vote by player representatives was 25-2 in favor of the deal, with a three-quarters vote needed for approval. Boston and Sacramento cast the dissenting votes during a 35-minute meeting.

"We're all smiles today," said the Knicks' Charles Smith, a union vice president. "It was a long, tedious process. A long, long time waiting to get the season started."

Said Bulls player rep Steve Kerr: "I think the season will start on time. I guess it's not quite a done deal. There are a few things to iron out. I want to get to camp to play."

The vote clears the way to lift the lockout, which has been in place since July 1 and was the NBA's first job action. Training camps would open as scheduled Oct. 6 and the season would begin on time Nov. 3, if the owners approve the deal as expected.

"We will promptly submit the deal to the owners for ratification, and we hope to have their approval by Friday afternoon," NBA deputy commissioner Russ Granik said. "We would be able to lift the lockout and resume normal operations on Monday, September 18."

Knicks and union vice president Charles Smith (left), union chief Simon Gourdine (center) and Trail Blazers and union president Buck Williams announce Wednesday's player approval of a deal with the NBA owners.

There are still potential impediments, including one from Sacramento's Mitch Richmond.

Richmond has filed a charge with the National Labor Relations Board questioning whether players were coerced during their decertification vote in the past two weeks.

That vote was counted Tuesday and was overwhelmingly in favor of keeping the union. A group led by Michael Jordan and Patrick Ewing led the movement to decertify. They claimed players could get a better deal by dissolving the union and fighting the NBA in court.

David Odum, an attorney representing Richmond, said he expected to hear from the NLRB next week.

"We know there were players who voted in favor of not decertifying who were opposed to the collective bargaining agreement," he said. "But really they voted the way they did because they were afraid all or part of the season would be lost pursuant to threats of commissioners (David Stern and Grant Tinker). That's illegal coercion and that's what Mitchell's case is based on. We think it has merit."

Baseball owners no closer on agreement

The Associated Press

DETROIT — National League president Len Coleman wants the Pirates to remain in Pittsburgh and expressed "guarded optimism" Wednesday that Kevin McClatchy will buy the team.

"Our hope is that McClatchy's group will be successful during this 10-day window," Coleman said after a 2½-hour meeting of NL owners.

The 10-member consortium that owns the Pirates has been trying to sell the team since Aug. 3, 1994. McClatchy, a newspaper heir from Sacramento, Calif., has exclusive negotiating rights through Sept. 22. William Collins III, who in March failed in his bid for an expansion team, wants to buy the Pirates and move them to Washington.

Coleman made it clear that baseball owners back McClatchy's group, but refused to rule out a possible move.

"There's always a chance, but our first priority is to keep the team in Pittsburgh," he said.

On the middle day of their fall quarterly meetings, owners said they will vote Thursday on the $85 million sale of the Oakland Athletics from the Hius family to a group headed by developers Steve Schott and Ken Hofmann.

8-mari contests impact on title hopes

By Larry Hovey

"Crunch" time begins hitting hard in the Canyon and Sawtooth eight-man conference this week with a pair of games that should at least settle championship directions.

The features will find undefeated Declo, 2-0, traveling to Gooding, 1-0, for a 7:30 p.m. game while Carey will be home to Rockland at 4 p.m. for a battle of what appears the two of the stronger eight-man teams in south-central Idaho. North Gem and Camas County appear to be the other eight-man teams with strong title hopes while Shoshone can't be counted out despite a loss to Rockland.

Gooding has cruised to a pair of victories over Class A-2 opponents, Wood River and Buhl, scoring 41 points on each occasion. Declo also is averaging 41 points per game, beating Aberdeen 40-14 and Filer 42-12.

Gooding has allowed 30 points while Declo has given up 24.

Rockland has rung up three straight victories, although two of them have been at the wire. After whipping Hansen 41-6 in the opener, the Bulldogs nipped North Gem 8-6 in overtime and Shoshone 18-12.

Carey is the defending league and state champion and appears to have the speed to bring more ornamental hardware to the trophy cases. The Mustangs have toppled Richfield and Castelford by 44-point margins and have a forfeit over Sho-Ban, which is foregoing this year's grid season.

The other leagues are still tuning up with non-conference foes — with the exception of Twin Falls which will be invading Borah in a playoff-pod game.

The Canyon Conference schedule is rounded out with Wendell, 3-0, at Filer, 1-2, and Kimberly, 1-1, at Valley, 0-2. Pace-setting Glens Ferry, 1-0, is stepping up a classification to entertain the 0-3 Buhl Indians.

In the other eight-man games, Camas County takes its undefeated boast to Bancroft where the North Gem Coyotes have only that overtime loss to Rockland against them.

Young Bruins under fire vs. Borah

By Larry Hovey
Times-News writer

TWIN FALLS — The young and undefeated Twin Falls Bruins march into fire test No. 3 Friday night, invading Boise State's Bronco Stadium to meet the 3-0 and third-ranked Borah Lions.

The game will begin at 6 p.m. and be followed by another Class A-1 battle between Boise and Centennial.

This is Twin Falls' first playoff pod game and will count toward participation in post-season play.

Coach Mark Schaaf flatly states this will be a tough assignment. "They are huge on both sides of the line," he said of the Lions, kicking off 6-foot, 6-inches and 280 pounds. "Their offensive line averages about 240 pounds (280, 265, 260 and 195) and their defense is in the 210-pound area."

Schaaf said he believes the Lions will thus try to establish this as a battle of the trenches.

"They appear capable of throwing the ball a little better than the last couple of seasons but they prefer to run it," he said.

The Lions usually go with an option, pounding the fullback inside behind that big line or pitching back to speedster Bob Gray.

It was Gray's 49-yard punt return that set up the only touchdown in Borah's 10-0 season-opening win against Hillcrest.

Because of that, Schaaf says "Gray is very explosive and while he will be difficult to contain on sweeps, we have to keep the ball away from him on special teams."

On defense, the Lions "use a lot of 4-6 and stunt their inside linebackers. They use a lot of one-on-one coverage in the secondary."

"That gives us a chance to pull off the big play — if we can protect the quarterback long enough for him to deliver the ball."

Schaaf said the Bruins running game worries him now because against Minico's larger defensive line "we weren't very tough. We thought we could run better than we did but their defensive line controlled us."

He said post-game film reviews indicate part of the problem was unaggressive blocking by running backs.

"So we've worked pretty hard on that week. We're trying to stress to them that they can't relax just because they aren't carrying the ball," he said.

Idaho Women's Amateur champ leads USGA senior tourney

The Associated Press

ST. PAUL, Minn. — Jean Smith of Boise shot a 1-over-par 74 Wednesday to take a three-stroke lead after the first round of the 34th USGA Senior Women's Amateur Championship.

Smith, 54, who earned a sixth Idaho Women's Amateur title this summer, offset three bogeys with two birdies. She was the only player near par over the 5,816-yard layout at the Somerset Country Club, finishing comfortably ahead of five players who tied for second at 77.

Smith held a 20-foot uphill birdie putt at the 156-yard No. 4, but bogeyed her last hole, the 467-yard No. 9, to lose her chance at matching par. "I don't like to protect a lead, I would much rather go after it," Smith said. "But I have aspirations to win, and I think anything is possible if you come here with thoughts in your head that you are going to win."

Nancy Fitzgerald of Carmel, Ind., runner-up in this event last year, Chris Epperly of Virginia Beach, Va., JoAnn Lindsay of Edina, Minn., Elizabeth Curlin of Versailles, Ky., and Jane Moffatt of Canada all shot 77.

The defending champion, Marlene Sireit of Canada, shot 78.

Atlanta clinches division title in 9-7 victory over Rockies

DENVER (AP) — The Atlanta Braves became the first National League team to win four straight division titles, clinching the East on Wednesday with a 9-7 victory over the Colorado Rockies at Coors Field.

Fred McGriff hit a three-run homer and two doubles and Ryan Klesko drove in two runs with a pair of doubles. Jeff Blauser hit a solo home run and Marquis Grissom, who had three hits as the Braves ended their three-game losing streak.

The Rockies, who lead the NL West by one game from Los Angeles, had their team-record six-game winning streak stopped. Dante Bichette hit three doubles for Colorado, including a two-run drive during a four-run rally in the ninth.

Jason Schmidt (2-0) was the winner, taking over in the second inning after starting pitcher Kent Mercker bruised his left tricep fielding a bunt.

Roger Bailey (7-6) took the loss, losing for the first time in six starts.

Reds 6, Marlins 0
CINCINNATI — Pete Schourek took a no-hitter into the sixth inning and Barry Larkin capped a three-run walk with his 14th homer as Cincinnati beat Florida.

Schourek (16-7) walked Chuck Carr in the first, but he was shown out to steal second. Schourek was perfect after that until Charles Johnson singled cleanly to center with one out in the sixth.

Johnson became the second NL pitcher to win 16 games, along with Atlanta's Greg Maddux. He struck out six and walked two in seven innings.

Hal Morris and Benito Santiago had back-to-back doubles in the second off Chris Hammond (7-6) to give the Reds a 1-0 lead. In the fifth, Schourek led off with a bouncing single up the middle and scored on Mariano Duncan's double. Larkin's homer made it 4-0.

Major Leagues

Cardinals 8, Giants 4

ST. LOUIS — David Bell homered and drove in three runs as St. Louis completed a three-game sweep of San Francisco.

The Cardinals, who outscored the Giants 31-9 in the series, won their season-high sixth in a row.

Ray Lankford extended his hitting streak to 14 games with an RBI double in the third, but he missed an opportunity to tie the Bill Bottolmy's team record for homering in five successive games.

Dan Plesac (4-4) allowed four runs on nine hits with two walks and six strikeouts in six innings for his second victory in a row. Sergio Valdez (3-4) took the loss.

Padres 8, Pirates 7
PITTSBURGH — Pinch-hitter Roberto Petagine's two-run double keyed a four-run seventh inning that carried San Diego over Pittsburgh.

The Padres used five pinch-hitters and a pinch-runner against four Pirates relievers in the eighth.

Tony Gwynn opened the inning with a walk and Ken Caminiti singled. After a forfeit, Marc Newfield singled off Jon Lieber to drive in a run. Brian Johnson pinch-hit an RBI double off Dan Felsen (4-4) and Petagine's single scored the last two runs.

Ron Villone (2-1) got the win despite allowing a tiebreaking three-run homer to Ruben Sierra in the seventh. Doug Stieb pitched the final two innings for his first major league save.

Mets 10, Astros 5
NEW YORK — Damon Buford hit a pair of homers and Jeff Kent and Carl Everett had one each, leading New York over Houston and preventing the Astros from gaining a game in the wild card standings.

Bobby Jones (9-8) got his fourth straight victory, allowing nine hits while striking out four and walking one in a two-run win for Houston.

Buford, acquired from the Baltimore Orioles in July in a trade for Bobby Bonilla, has reached base safely in 20 of his last 42 plate appearances. Jeff Bagwell hit a two-run homer for Houston, which stayed two games behind the Dodgers in the wild card race. Los Angeles lost at Chicago earlier in the day. Mike Hampton (9-7) took the loss, lasting 4-2-3 innings and yielding six runs on nine hits and two walks.

Expos 5, Phillies 4
MONTREAL — Rondell White went 3-for-4 with two RBIs and scored a run as Montreal gained a split of the two-game series.

White, batting .567 over an eight-game hitting streak and .688 in the last four games, singled home Joe Mauer to snap a 2-2 tie in the fifth.

White also had an RBI single in the third and later scored on Mike Lieberthal's first of two passed balls while catching knuckleballer Dennis Springer (0-1), who was making his first major league start.

Gil Heryedia (5-6) pitched one inning of relief for the victory and Mel Rojas worked the last two innings for his 27th save.

Cubs 7, Dodgers 6, 13 innings
CHICAGO — Shawn Dunston drove in a run with a bases-loaded chopper in the 13th inning as Chicago won despite blowing a three-run lead in the ninth.

Chicago moved within four games of Los Angeles in the NL wild card race. The Dodgers remained a game behind first-place Colorado in the NL West.

Mark Grace led off the 13th with a single against Mark Guthrie (2-1). Sammy Sosa hit a soft groundout to first baseman Eric Karros but beat Karros to the bag for an infield hit. Second baseman Delino DeShields then dropped Luis Gonzalez's pop to shallow-right for an error, leading the Cubs to victory.

After Jim Bruske relieved, Dunston got just enough wood on a 0-1 pitch to chop it high to shortstop Chad Foulke, who had no play. Terry Adams (1-0), who pitched a scoreless 13th for the Cubs, earned his first major league victory.

Boston 2, Baltimore 0
BALTIMORE — Tim Wakefield allowed two hits in 8 1-3 innings and rookie Dwayne Hoge hit his first major league homer as the Boston Red Sox ended their five-game losing streak by beating the Baltimore Orioles 2-0 Wednesday night.

Hosey went 4-for-5 with two doubles and scored both Boston runs. Jose Canseco extended his hitting streak to 15 games with an RBI single in the eighth inning and the Red Sox snapped their longest skid of the season.

Wakefield (16-4) struck out two, walked three and hit a batter. He allowed only one runner past first base. Rick Aguilera got two outs, retiring Cal Ripken on a grounder with runners on first and second to end the game for his 28th save.

Wakefield allowed rookie Jimmy Haynes (0-1), who allowed three hits in seven innings in his major league debut.

Indians 5, Yankees 0
CLEVELAND — Charles Nagy pitched a three-hitter for his first shutout in three years and Albert Belle hit his 37th home run as the Cleveland Indians stopped the New York Yankees' six-game winning streak.

Shortstop Omar Vizquel drove in three runs and was brilliant defensively for the Indians, who avoided a three-game sweep. They split the season series with the Yankees 2-1.

Nagy (14-5) won his fourth straight start, walking two and striking out five in his second complete game of the year and his first shutout since August 1, 1992.

David Cone (15-8) yielded five runs and nine hits in seven innings.

Athletics 6, Royals 5
OAKLAND, Calif. — Mark McGwire hit his 30th homer and Danny Tartabull homered for the first time since his trade to Oakland in late July as the Athletics defeated the Kansas City Royals.

McGwire's homer was his 26th, tying him with Reggie Jackson for first place on the Oakland career list.

Wally Joynt hit a two-run single off closer Dennis Eckersley with two outs in the ninth to pull the Royals within a run, but Eckersley got Gary Gattis to fly to center for his 28th save.

Doug Johns (4-1), making his sixth major league start, allowed three runs and six hits in six innings for Oakland. Jason Jacome (4-4) allowed four runs and six hits in 5 1-3 innings for Kansas City, which has lost five of six.

Rangers 3, Blue Jays 2, 11 innings
TORONTO — Ivan Rodriguez hit an RBI single in the 11th inning and the Texas Rangers beat the Toronto Blue Jays for their fourth straight victory.

Texas moved within one game of New York for the wild-card spot.

Toronto lost its fifth in a row. The Blue Jays have dropped six straight extra-inning games.

Matt Whiteide (3-4) was the winner and Mike Timlin (4-3) took the loss.

Tigers 5, Brewers 3
DETROIT — Lou Whitaker's three-run homer in the ninth inning gave Detroit over Milwaukee for their fifth straight win.

It was the 13th loss in 15 games for the Brewers, who are scrambling for a wild-card AL playoff berth.

Whitaker and Alan Trammell played in their 1,915th game, breaking the AL record for teammates of 1,914 held by George Brett and Frank White of the Kansas City Royals.

David Hulse homered for Milwaukee and drove in all three Brewers' runs and Phil Nevin homered for Detroit.

Mike Fetters (0-3), who had converted 21 of 24 save opportunities, was the loser. Dwayne Henry (1-0) pitched a scoreless ninth for the victory.

Firefighters battle fire northeast of Hazelton

KIMAMA — A fire scorched about 1,700 acres of federal and private land about five miles northeast of Hazelton Tuesday evening.

The blaze started accidentally after a farmer's wheat-stubble fire burned out of control at about 4:15 p.m., said Frank Miller, logistics coordinator for the West Upper Snake River District in the West Zone of the BLM.

Forty-four fire fighters, 12 trucks and a helicopter and plane helped fight the blaze, which was expected to be controlled sometime today, Miller said. Rural fire districts from Hazelton and Minidoka County guarded two famous areas nearby, he said.

The fire was the fifth out-of-control stubble burn in the BLM district, covering parts of Gooding, Lincoln, Blaine, Minidoka, Twin Falls, Cassia counties, Miller said. The fire was one of several near Kimama, he said.

Informational meeting set on hauling radioactive waste

TWIN FALLS — Anyone who cares to ask questions about transportation of radioactive waste through Idaho is invited to a public meeting Tuesday at the College of Southern Idaho.

The meeting will run from 1 to 7 p.m. in CSI's Exposition Building. At least two weeks and for sampling highly radioactive nuclear wastes will be on display. A variety of hazardous materials response vans and a "Radiological Assistance Program" van from the U.S. Department of Energy also will be on hand, he said.

Casks of radioactive waste are carried on trucks or trains to the Idaho National Engineering Laboratory near Idaho Falls; the U.S. Navy has been sending nuclear waste to the INEL since the 1950s. The casks are designed to withstand severe railroad accidents. There have been at least three train derailments along the tracks through Gooding and Shoshone in the past two years; none of the accidents involved trains hauling nuclear waste.

Jerome County ponders plan for ambulance office, meetings

JEROME — Instead of a place to tank up with gas and get the windshield cleaned, an old service station could become an ambulance headquarters and community meeting place, according to a Jerome County plan.

The service station, came under county ownership when about $10,000 in back taxes were not paid.

Plans for the area include room to house three ambulances indoors, an office and living quarters for the ambulance crews. A conference room that could be used for community meetings would also be available, county commission Chairman Roy Prescott said.

"The remodeling job would cost about $250,000. The whole idea hinges on getting approval of a grant," Prescott said.

The preliminary application for the community block grant will be submitted by Nov. 3 and, if approved, construction could start next spring, Emergency Medical Service Director Larry Wood said.

Design of the building has been completed, underground tanks removed and environmental tests conducted and approved by the Environmental Protection Agency, Prescott said.

Regulators OK plan to help rural telephone companies

BOISE — It's only pennies per month, but telephone companies will be paying more into an Idaho fund that helps small rural telephone companies keep rates low.

The Public Utilities Commission on Tuesday approved an increase in the Universal Service Fund surcharge. There's a surcharge on all long-distance calls within the state. The per-minute surcharge also doubled for residential customers to 6 cents per month and business customers will pay a doubled surcharge of 14 cents per month starting Oct. 1.

Small companies get payments from the fund to keep local rates down. Seven independent companies are drawing $1.56 million annually. Without additional revenue, the commission said the fund would go broke in 1997.

TWIN FALLS — Advocates for Idaho's rivers pleaded with the Northwest Power Planning Council Wednesday to "show some leadership" on legislation brewing in Washington to cap fish and wildlife expenses for the financially-troubled Bonneville Power Administration.

"The legislation is on a fast track and could be tacked onto a major appropriations bill by the end of the month; as a rider, it would enjoy virtual immunity from veto. So far, the 'cost cap' legislation has received no public hearing in Idaho."

Council member Stan Grae, of Montana, said the power council has been kept in the dark about the congressional push to limit BPA's fish and wildlife obligations.

"We, as a council, don't know, either, we haven't been in on it," he said at the council's meeting in Twin Falls. The council is supposed to balance the needs of fish and wildlife against electrical power production throughout the Northwest.

If enacted, the legislation would establish a pot of money — estimated at around $400 million — to be spent on fish and wildlife throughout the Columbia River basin, Mary McGown, of Idaho Rivers United, said at an impromptu press conference. Lost power revenues would be subtracted for water used to help fish — rather than spinning hydroelectric turbines, she said.

Subtracting lost power revenues could leave as little as $95 million in hard cash to solve problems created by hydroelectric dams throughout Washington, Oregon, Idaho and western Montana, she said.

Charging lost power costs for water dedicated to fish — but not charging for water used by irrigation utilities and users of Snake and Columbia river locks — would be arbitrary and capricious, said Min Sanchez, in a letter that was read into the record. Sanchez is the executive coordinator of Idaho Steelhead and Salmon Unlimited.

Spending priorities would be determined by a seven-member council, McGown said, adding that most of the money probably would go to protect steelhead and salmon that are on the brink of extinction.

Power planning council backs fish, wildlife funding effort

By William Brock
Times-News writer

TWIN FALLS — A regional power planning council put its stamp of approval Wednesday on $77.5 million in funding priorities to offset fish and wildlife losses caused by hydroelectric dams in the Columbia River Basin.

The funding priorities were approved by the eight-member Northwest Power Planning Council, which tries to balance the needs of fish and wildlife against electrical power production in Idaho, Oregon, Washington and Montana.

The funding priorities will be forwarded to the Bonneville Power Administration — which sells electricity generated by federal dams throughout the Northwest.

Gooding official: Sheriff lacked cooperative spirit

By Karen Tolkinen
Times-News writer

GOODING — Gooding County commissioners would have a chance of putting deputies back on the streets if they petitioned the court for more money, the chairman of the board of commissioners said on Wednesday.

With a little more cooperation from Sheriff Jim Jax, a compromise would have been willing to open the issue with a judge, Chairman Win Hensieck said. But they warned him seven months ago that his spending could lead to layoffs, and now the responsibility lies with Jax, he said.

"It's nothing that caught anyone by surprise," he said.

Please see GOODING/C3

Gail Ater of Gooding, board member of Idaho Rivers United, urges the Northwest Power Planning Council to get involved in 'cost cap' legislation brewing in Washington D.C.

The upshot could be a low priority for fish and wildlife projects in the Magic Valley — where there are no salmon or steelhead, she said. Stabilizing water levels at Lower Salmon Dam, or boosting Snake River flows downstream of Milner Dam would have to compete with other, possibly more compelling projects elsewhere in the Columbia River Basin.

"I'm afraid our problems would be minuscule compared to other, bigger problems," Buhl resident Bob Luntley told the council.

One draft of the legislation would allow the Idaho Power Co. to contribute to the fund. If that happens, McGown and other river advocates fear that money needed to solve problems along the Middle Snake — where several of the utility's dams are located — would be spent somewhere else.

That outcome would effectively preclude the efforts of people who have been working for years to win concessions from Idaho Power as the utility tries to relinquish its dams. The utility earns millions of dollars a year by harnessing the public waters of Idaho, and the company has an obligation to "mitigate" — or ease — some of the problems caused by its dams.

The cycle for dam relicensing is measured in decades, said Twin Falls resident Kristy Webb, "and this is the opportunity, basically, of a lifetime."

It will be a sad day, for fish and wildlife along the Middle Snake if Idaho Power is allowed to meet its mitigation responsibilities by paying into a fund spread across four states, McGown added.

"I can't see a benefit to Idaho," she said.

With money tight, most of the budget items are simply a continuation of fish and wildlife projects that are already under way.

— Bert Bowler, Idaho Department of Fish and Game

Challenged by an increasingly competitive energy market, the BPA can commit no more than $83 million for fish and wildlife projects in the coming business year, which begins Oct. 1.

Of the $83 million budget, $5.5 million will be consumed by the BPA's staff — leaving $77.5 million for fish and wildlife improvements. Of that sum, 70 percent will be spent on efforts to save salmon and steelhead, while the remaining 30 percent will be split evenly between resident fish and wildlife projects.

Another $30 million has been pledged by the BPA to fund salmon efforts for animals protected by the Endangered Species Act. Some $20 million will go toward research, monitoring and evaluation, while the remainder will go to toward initial protection efforts.

Balancing the budget for the Northwest's fish and wildlife was a "gut-wrenching experience," said Bert Bowler, Columbia River Policy Coordinator for the Idaho Department of Fish and Game.

With money tight, most of the budget items are simply a continuation of fish and wildlife projects that are already under way, he said.

Roughly $612,000 will be spent to continue the captive breeding program for sockeye salmon at Redfish Lake. The program, which began in 1991, raises salmon at the state hatchery in Eagle, then trucks the fish to Redfish Lake for release. Another $650,000 will be spent to continue a "natural" salmon production program, Bowler said.

Leading Idahoans gather for golf

By Frank E. Lockwood
Times-News writer

SUN VALLEY — Politicians, lobbyists and business executives are gathering in Sun Valley for the Governor's Cup golf tournament, which kicks off this morning.

Tournament proceeds go to scholarships for Gem State students studying at Idaho colleges and universities.

Gov. Phil Batt will be on hand, greeting participants and working on his game. Also attending — former Gov. Cecil Andrus who founded the tournament.

For $25,000, corporations such as Micron Technology can be "major sponsors" of the event. The rank-and-file pay $395 for a few days of golf and a handful of social events.

Non-golfers can attend the tournament's Western barbecue, buffet and ice show for just $450.

Dick Burwell, owner of Magic Valley Distributing in Twin Falls is a member of the event's board of directors. In the beginning, "the tournament was just a Good-Old-Boys Idaho thing," Burwell said.

But that changed during Andrus' second stint in office. Andrus realized that by raising big money for scholarships, Idaho could stop losing its best and brightest students to out-of-state schools, Burwell said.

Today, the gathering is "less politics than the concept of (helping) education," according to Burwell.

But Batt spokeswoman Amy Kleiner suggests the tournaments a little bit of politics, charity and capitalism.

"I think people view it as a chance to meet the governor and also talk to other people in business," Kleiner said. The list of 300 sponsors and participants includes "a lot of big-business types," she noted.

Batt isn't a golfing novice. "He's a fair player. He enjoys the game. I think he finds it relaxing," Kleiner said.

Other participants include U.S. Sen. Larry Craig, Twin Falls contractor Marvin Aslett, Boise State University Charles Ruck, Micron spokesman Kipp Bedard and Idaho Housing Authority head Rod Beck.

Although the golf tournament benefits education, several heavy hitters in education won't be present. State Schools Superintendent Anne Fox and members of the House and Senate Education Committees aren't on the list of participants.

The changing views of militiaman Sherwood

Idaho militiaman Samuel Sherwood's political platform is like the Magic Valley's weather: If you don't like it, then wait a few minutes and maybe it'll change.

Whether it's abortion or gay rights, Sherwood's answers can vary 180 degrees on any given day.

The United States Militia Association's commander-in-chief has been, at various times, both a gay basher and a defender of gay rights.

First, Sherwood suggested the death penalty for homosexuals in his 1992 book, "The Little Republics." Then, in 1993, he asked to be eastern Idaho coordinator of the anti-gay-rights Idaho Citizens Alliance, according to ICA founder Kelly Walton. He even claimed credit for the near-success of 1994's anti-gay-rights ballot measure, Proposition 1. But Sherwood apparently abandoned his death-to-homosexuals rhetoric earlier this month.

On Saturday, one day after Walton rejected signature-gathering help from Sherwood's militia association, Sherwood became a champion of oppressed gays and lesbians.

Sherwood labeled the Alliance's new anti-gay rights ballot measure "fascism" and likened the ICA campaign to Adolf Hitler, according to the Idaho Statesman.

That must have pained the USMA's Idaho state director, Bill Tuttle of Twin Falls. Just days before, Tuttle had been collecting signatures for the ICA at the Twin Falls County Fair.

Apparently, Sherwood also re-examined his views on abortion last week.

In "The Little Republics," the commander-in-chief of the USMA:

- Called abortion "murder of the most heinous kind."
- Labeled pro-choice legislators as unfit for office and accessories to murder.
- Claimed that God's suggested punishment for interrupting a pregnancy is death.

But on Saturday, Sherwood vigorously denounced ICA attempts to outlaw term abortions. He said Sherwood decided that it is wrong to try to stop "murder of the most heinous kind" in Idaho? Or is he now placing a higher priority on sabotaging Walton than on saving the unborn?

Meanwhile, Sherwood can't decide whether to take up the sword or the plowshare.

In January, the USMA was selling ammunition and encouraging followers to buy semi-automatic AK-type rifles manufactured in Russia, Hungary and Finland.

In February, Sherwood told a riled-up Chualar audience that "there'll be blood

Twin Falls

George A. Lyda
George Ancil Lyda, 71, of Boise and formerly of Twin Falls, went to be with our Heavenly Father on Sunday, Sept. 10, 1995.

Memorial services will be held at 11 a.m. Saturday, Sept. 16, at the Alden-Wagoner Funeral Chapel in Boise, following cremation. Pastor Jim Pullin will officiate. George was born May 6, 1924, in Everett, Wash., to Della Smith and Ancil Lyda. He served in the U.S. Army during World War II. After being honorably discharged, he married Laura Anderson on Sept. 17, 1950, in Twin Falls. They had one son, Darfield. The family moved to Boise in 1955, where George founded Boise Leasing. He was still active in the company as vice-president and manager of leasing.

George was hard-working man, honest, dependable, kind and giving - a real gentleman. He helped so many people and was a good friend to all, reaching out and touching his extended family and friends all of his life. He was a loving husband and wonderful father, grandfather and brother. He helped many entrepreneurs get started in business, and was always trusting of everyone. He was a self-taught musician and loved to play the organ and piano.

Is the man who knows how to succeed.

George is survived by his beloved wife, Laura; his son, Daniel (Janet); two grandsons, Bryan and Brandon; two sisters, Edythe Baughman and Ida (Rudy) Loder; and four brothers, Norman (Marie) Emmett (Clifford) (Erma) and Bill (Linda). He was preceded in death by his parents, Ancil and Della; and a brother, Raymond.

George will be missed by all who loved him. Memorials may be made to the Mountain States Tumor Institute.

Filer

Norman O. Tufte

Norman O. Tufte, 73, died Wednesday, Sept. 13, 1995, at the Magic Valley Regional Medical Center in Twin Falls.

He was born Aug. 8, 1922, in Woodville, Wis., to Asmund and Hilda Tufte. Around the age of 1 year, the family moved back to Gilman, Iowa. Norman graduated from Gilman High School and attended the University of Iowa. He was united in marriage in May 1953, to Mary Marnie Dobbs. He was engaged in farming for a number of years. He also managed three fertilizer and chemical plants in Iowa. He owned and managed a hotel in Redwood Falls, Minn. Before moving to Mountain Home in 1980, he owned and operated a real estate office in Lebanon, Mo., for several years. He enjoyed renovating older homes and moved to Filer in 1991.

He was a lifelong member of the Lutheran Church and a member of Peace Lutheran Church here. He loved his church and church family.

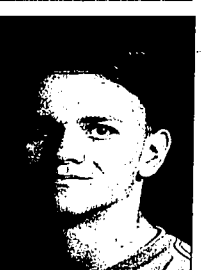

Norman is survived by his wife, Mary of Filer; daughter, Tanna (Bob) Milburn of Mountain Home; stepdaughter, Sandra Dobbs of Newton, Iowa; five grandchildren, Princess Young of Tucson, Ariz.; Angela Montgomery of Mountain Home Air Force Base; Terry Milburn of Mountain Home; Andrea Milburn of Boise; and Bobby Milburn of Bliss; three great-granddaughters; two brothers, Otto of Carlsbad, Calif., and Maurice of Gilman, Iowa; and numerous nieces and nephews. He was preceded in death by his parents and a sister, Ida Mattson.

The funeral will be held at 11 a.m. Saturday, Sept. 16, 1995, at the Peace Lutheran Church in Filer. Interment will follow at the IOOF Cemetery in Filer. Friends and family may call at the church on Saturday beginning at 9:30 a.m.

Memorials are suggested to the Peace Lutheran Church Building Fund. Arrangements are in care of Alb Colonial Funeral Home in Twin Falls.

Jerome

Donald J. Whisler
Donald Jay "Dee Jay" or "Bubba" Whisler, 18, of Jerome, died early Tuesday, Sept. 12, 1995, at the Magic Valley Regional Medical Center in Twin Falls of injuries received in an automobile accident.

He was born July 9, 1977, in Denver, Colo., and was raised and educated in Denver and later in Jerome where he moved in 1992. He had worked for Triple J Construction, Archibald Roofing and at the time of his death, was working for ABC Seamless Siding.

He was a good kid, who loved his family, fishing, hunting, camping and dancing.

Survivors include his mother, Kaneltha Lepker of Jerome; stepfather, Richard Whisler of Pueblo, Colo.; father, Donald Cody of Phoenix, Ariz.; grandparents, Jim and Gayle Cody of Denver; his fiancée, Libby Hobbs of Jerome and her family, Willie and Pat Hobbs and Dave and Kellie Traugber and families; two sisters, Candy Whisler of Jerome and Michelle Lepker of Twin Falls; uncle's Tim and George Baer, both of Denver; two nephews, Daniel and Andrew Jay Whisler, both of Jerome; and two cousins, Christopher Baer of Granby, Colo., and Adam Baer of Denver and their families.

The funeral will be held at 11 a.m. Friday at the Hove-Robertson Funeral Chapel in Jerome, with Pastor Jerry Marsh officiating. Cremation will follow. Friends may call from 6 to 8 p.m. today and from 9 to 10 a.m. on Friday at the funeral chapel.

Utah family's anger toward killer turns to compassion

POINT OF THE MOUNTAIN, Utah (AP) - The night since her father died with 44 stab wounds, Sherma Lewis has felt pain, anger and bitterness.

"We all walked around for a long time with a knot in our throats and a dull, dull feeling in our hearts," Lewis said of her family. "We were going through the motions of living, but not feeling anything."

She has attended parole hearings for Johnny Angelo Perez and sent letters to the Board of Pardons and Parole, asking that Perez remain in prison for the 1976 slaying of her father, Henry Topping Jr.

But on Tuesday at a parole hearing for Perez, she unexpectedly felt compassion.

"I came away with a much different feeling. I felt kind of sorry for him. My gosh, that kid has been in prison for more than half his life," she said.

Later that afternoon, after she and her son talked about the unexpected feelings they shared, Lewis said she thought long and hard about her dad and Perez.

"We both felt that if my dad had been here, his expression might have been to give the boy a chance."

Lewis, however, told the Standard-Examiner she wasn't quite prepared to approve of Perez being released from prison.

"I don't know if I'm ready to say put him out in society. My feelings still don't answer the question" of whether is now, is the right time, she said.

Perez said at the hearing he was "out of control" the night he stabbed Topping and robbed the hotel where Topping worked.

"Basically, I was living on the streets. I fell apart," he said.

Now Perez wants a chance to put his life together once again. He appeared at the hearing hoping to get a release date. The board will decide in the next two weeks.

"I'm asking for a chance," Perez said. "I'm not the same person I was when I walked in this prison 19 years ago. I don't want violence in my life. It's in my past."

Perez was 15 when he robbed the Ben Lomond Hotel, now the Radisson Suite Hotel. It was Oct. 25, 1976, a night Topping, 65, was supposed to be off. He had agreed to work for someone else.

Perez was high on speed and cocaine.

Topping was startled when he accidentally surprised the teenager in the middle of taking money out of the cashier's cage. The two struggled.

Ogden police Lt. Richard Peterson handled the case.

"The slashing and stabbing was so vicious. His body was about in the middle of the room, a little towards the elevator. The blood was all over the walls from the knife being slung around," Peterson said.

Perez was arrested within a few days of the attack.

Peterson said the teen-ager had cut himself severely on the hand and held it bleeding in an ice bucket full of cash as he fled the hotel.

At a poker game that same night, some of his friends became suspicious when the money Perez wanted to use in the game was bloodied. The knife and its leather sheath were found buried in the yard of one of the teenager's acquaintances.

Perez was sentenced to 20 years to life, and this is at least his third attempt at parole.

Perez could barely read when he went to prison and now, at age 34, he's just a few classes away from an associate's degree in computer graphics.

He said education changed him, enabling him to shed repeated discipline problems in his first 12 years in prison.

Board member Curtis Garner noted Perez had been active in many prison groups, including anger management, and had scored well on a recent psychological report.

"The test results are encouraging. They indicate you have changed significantly. You're more controlled, more of a rational thinker," Garner said.

Cookie Valencia, Perez's older brother, said it's time for everyone to forgive and realize Perez has paid for his crime.

But Garner said, "No amount of time can compensate for an offense like this. You've been here 19 years, but I don't know if that is going to be enough. ... There are no good answers in this case."

House panel gives its OK to New Mexico nuke dump

The Associated Press

The House Commerce Committee Wednesday approved legislation accelerating the opening of a New Mexico dump for low-level but long-lasting nuclear waste now stored in Idaho and elsewhere.

The panel endorsed the measure sponsored by Republican Congressman Joe Skeen of New Mexico, 21-12, and forwarded it to the Budget Committee for its review.

Accelerated opening of the Waste Isolation Pilot Plant has been estimated to save hundreds of millions of dollars in the coming years, butressing prospects for Budget Committee approval. That would advance the measure to the full House for consideration.

Opening of the underground facility and moving waste now stored at the Idaho National Engineering Laboratory is a key component of Gov. Phil Burt's proposal to allow limited radioactive dumping to resume in return for guarantees that all high-level and about half the low-level waste now stored at INEL be removed by 2036.

That portion of Burt's deal, which has already been accepted by the federal government, requires waste to be moving from Idaho to New Mexico in the spring of 1999.

Skeen's bill would eliminate environmental regulation of the new Mexico dump by the Environmental Protection Agency and charge the Energy Department with certifying that it is ready to open. The deadline for opening would be moved up from mid-1998 to March 1997.

For years, thousands of barrels of low-level and transuranic waste have been piling up in Idaho and other facilities throughout the country, Republican Congressman Michael Cramer of Idaho said. "The federal government has made promises to provide remedies for its mistakes."

This legislation provides much-needed follow-through.

Critics claim the shift in regulatory control will undermine years of campaign to assure that if the dump ever opens, it can be managed.

The Congressional Budget Office has estimated the Skeen bill will save taxpayers $130 million over five years and another $400 million a year for continued storage of waste at all the other sites.

Grazing bill clears subcommittee

The Associated Press

A House subcommittee has turned aside most of a New Mexico congressman's efforts to revise a grazing bill that is backed by ranchers and abhorred by environmentalists.

Countering the proposed amendments, Rep. Helen Chenoweth, R-Idaho, asked Rep. Bill Richardson: "Where's the beef?"

The new Mexico Democrat replied: "I'm saying, 'Let's also have the trout.'"

The House Resources Committee's National Parks, Forests and Lands Subcommittee on Tuesday voted its assent to the bill by Rep. Wes Cooley, R-Ore., which is similar to New Mexico Republican Pete Domenici's Senate version.

"Unfortunately nothing happened that protected the multiple-use management" of range lands, said Frances Hunt, director of the Wilderness Society's BLM program.

However, the panel did pass one Richardson amendment stipulating that permittees could not interfere with or obstruct hunting or fishing on federal grazing lands.

Domenici has said he also would amend his bill to address the multiple-use concerns.

The House bill would give ranchers a free hand in grazing on public lands, although it would raise grazing fees about 30 percent.

It also would extend the length of grazing permits and create advisory groups that would help shape federal range practices.

"Right now," said Richardson, "this bill is everything the cattle industry ever wanted, and we need to improve it."

Study: Wildfires, not roads, erode

BOISE (AP) - A researcher says it's "baloney" to claim that roads built for timber sales caused or contributed to heavy erosion damage in the Boise National Forest.

"There's no way you can attribute any of the damage to roads," said Walt Megahan, research hydrologist for a national environmental consulting firm. The North Fork of the Boise River was damaged and its channel moved by a heavy rainstorm.

A Boise National Forest news release Tuesday said some environmental groups suggested that roads in the area made the damage worse.

It was caused by severe fire damage from 1994 wildfires, researchers concluded.

"The numerous blow-outs on the North Fork of the Boise River were the result of heavy rains on areas that were burned at moderate to high intensity ... it did not appear that the road network played a part in triggering this geologic event," said Justin Hays, earth scientist for Idaho Rivers United.

The federal Bureau of Reclamation, state Division of Environmental Quality and Fish and Game Department agents toured areas damaged by last year's fires and then by erosion this year. They concluded that water repellent soils caused by severe fire damage caused strong water flows.

Tracy Trent, regional supervisor for Fish and Game, said: "There didn't appear to be any correlation between roads and blow-outs. In some cases, what I saw was where roads stopped the flow and acted like waterbars to hold the sediment."

Forest Service photography showed that there was no erosion damage in watersheds that were not damaged in last year's fires.

Feds OK Jerome's computer program for students, teachers

By H.R. Weixel
Times-News correspondent

JEROME—Half a million dollars has been made available to put the best possible computer technology in Jerome classrooms. Use of the technology has put the Jerome school district on the "leading edge."

"Donald C. Holzengel, director of Northwest Regional Educational Laboratory technology program visited Jerome schools this week and said, 'As an outsider and visitor, I'm very impressed with the educational system the community has built here. We have no trouble holding up this district as exemplary to other districts.'"

The Northwest Regional Educational Laboratory works under a federal contract to evaluate technology purchased using grant funds. Holzengel was part of the group that selected Jerome as the No. 1 district for receiving grant money. The Jerome School District has received approval of a state-funded "technology grant" for about $500,000. Other state-funded innovative grants totaling $34,585 have been approved for purchasing supplemental equipment and supplies needed for creative teaching methods, according to Superintendent Jim Cobble.

Other small grants and district funds have been used to purchase and renovate new and existing computers, he said.

All school buildings will be networked with each other, businesses and local and world-wide communities, said Chris Gibson, special education director. More than 16 miles of networking cable has been put in to accomplish this.

"Combined with our 330 existing computers, the 185 new machines and 75 renovated machines, the district has more than 587 computers being used in our schools," Cobble said in a news release. Linking all computers to a district-wide network that will allow access to a world-wide network of information is a vital part of the total technology plan, he said.

"We're using this technology to complement our efforts to effectively teach the basic skills in a safe and orderly environment," Cobble said.

The grants included funds and equipment for staff training and 17 laptop computers. Each school building received two laser disc players, two TVs and two scan converters for displaying videos. Laser disc programs for teaching math, social studies, history, and art were purchased to provide a variety of motivational and informative instructional methods, according to the news release.

With the new equipment, the high school has 124 computers in classrooms and the four computer labs in the business, technology and agriculture departments. The Jerome Middle school received 54 new computers and a server. Central Elementary school received 26 new computers making a total of 78 being used in classrooms, offices and the computer lab. Jefferson Elementary has 52 computers in classrooms after receiving 27 new pieces of equipment. Ten thousand dollars in software has been added at Jefferson. Horizon Elementary school received five Pentium computers and three laptop computers. The school also received a CD-ROM stacker, laser disc player and two laser disc players.

The College of Southern Idaho; Land Title and Escrow, Inc.; Volvo, Inc.; and the Idaho National Engineering Laboratory donated several used computers that have been linked in with the school networks.

The computer technology has been backed up by extensive training for teachers in the use of computers and technology to increase student achievement, Cobble said.

Republican lawmakers find California judges too liberal

By Meredith Cohn
States News Service

WASHINGTON—Western Republican lawmakers criticized the nation's largest regional court system, which stretches from Hawaii to Montana, for being too big to serve all of its residents.

Sen. Slade Gorton of Washington led a group of lawmakers Wednesday who said they wanted to split the 9th Circuit Court, separating their courts from California's.

Before the Senate Judiciary Committee, Sen. Conrad Burns of Montana said residents of his state must spend their own money to fly to other states because there are no 9th Circuit Court judges in Montana.

"Not only are we footing the bill for this inefficient court as taxpayers, but we're also paying for other costs such as airfares for attorneys who must argue cases in Southern California," Burns said.

But Democrats and many lawyers and judges within the system oppose the move, saying it would be too expensive.

And some Democratic lawmakers said quietly that the Republicans seeking the split want to move away from California's "liberal" mindset and put more of a regional and conservative tilt on the courts.

Idaho's two Republican senators are among those trying to achieve the court split.

Without accusing Republicans publicly of trying to slant the court, Democrats said during the hearing local interpretations of federal laws could inappropriately develop under the proposal.

"Our federal judiciary is designed to apply federal constitutional and statutory law consistently throughout the entire United States," said Sen. Harry Reid, D-Nev. "There really is no place for regionalism in applying federal law."

Democratic Sen. Patty Murray of Washington added that a split would lead to "forum shopping" by litigants who would file their cases in whichever of the circuits was most likely to rule in their favor.

The 9th circuit is the largest geographically of the nation's 11 regional circuits of appeal with 14 million square miles spanning from Alaska to the Mexican border. It has jurisdiction over 50 million people, which is 60 percent more than the next largest court, and its appeals court has 28 judges, which is 11 more than any other.

The bill being considered by the Senate panel, would create a new 12th circuit court that would include Montana, Alaska, Idaho, Oregon and Washington. The new ninth circuit would cover the states of Arizona, California, Hawaii, Nevada, Guam, and the Northern Mariana Islands.

The bill's eight cosponsors are the Republican lawmakers from those states that would comprise the new 12th circuit, separate from California. (Sen. Max Baucus of Montana and Sen. Murray of Washington, both Democrats, oppose the bill).

The idea of dividing circuits is not new. Congress split the 5th Circuit Court in 1973, but rejected splitting the 9th in 1983, 1989 and 1991.

Democrats have opposed the idea each time. They say it would cost at least $40 million to duplicate structures and services.

"Passing this bill would legislate waste," said Sen. Dianne Feinstein, D-Calif. She added that it is an especially bad time to spend the extra money because Congress is considering plans to slash budgets in most other areas, including a proposal to cut half the money used to provide legal aid to the poor.

Also, she said 25 percent of the space in the circuit's San Francisco headquarters — that just got a $100 million facelift — would be left empty. Headquarters for the new 12th circuit would be in Seattle.

Also, supporters say the court is efficient. The 9th circuit is among the fastest in the nation at deciding cases once they are submitted to the judges — although the overall time to complete an appeal takes longer than the national average, according to J. Clifford Wallace, chief judge of the 9th Circuit Court of Appeals.

Jerome County procedure irks resident

By H.R. Weixel
Times-News correspondent

JEROME—By approving a $5.3 million 1996 budget, Jerome County commissioners also approved the change of one part-time commissioner to full-time, a move one resident says was done without public involvement.

"This is a major issue and the public was not informed of it," county resident Clint Carlin told the commissioners at a budget meeting Monday.

"It's my understanding it is your decision to have this (full-time position) and that you had deliberations and discussions on it. Also, you have all agreed Prescott should have the job," Carlin said. "I've been told these decisions have all been made in the confines of the budget process."

"When I asked if this was ever placed on the agenda, I was told by Cheryl (Watts) and Jerry (Ridley) it was not. This is in violation of the Idaho Code," Carlin said.

"If the prosecuting attorney says we didn't do this correctly, this board can hire an administrator. That could cost more, like $35,000 to $40,000 a year," Commissioner Jerry Ridley replied.

Commissioners plan to appoint Commissioner Roy Prescott from the east end of the county to serve on a full-time basis beginning Oct. 1 at an annual salary of $35,000.

"They hired me by election to take care of county business. I don't care what three persons you put here, you can't do everything that's needed. We've come to the time when a decision must be made and something done," Prescott told Carlin.

Under Sheriff Bill Reid asked if the full-time job would be an elected position.

"What's going to happen at the next election?" he asked.

"This whole thing will need some refinement," Prescott said. "We'll have to change some things. This may not fly. People on the next commission might find this doesn't work. They can change it."

"I'm going to pursue this," Carlin said. "I have no vendetta against any of you, but I don't agree it's the prudent thing to do."

"You are to be commended for getting involved. It's a shame more don't come," Prescott said.

Other approved budget items include:

- A $98,400 contract with Byington, Holloway, Whipple and Jones of Burley to serve as public defender.

- A 5 percent pay raise for sheriff's department dispatchers.
- A new deputy and secretary for the prosecuting attorney's office and at least two probation officers for juvenile justice.

- $3,500 for autopsies, an amount some say is insufficient.

Gooding

prise," he said. "From the input from the community, they're as upset as the commissioners. I don't think the public feels throwing money at the problem would help."

Gooding County deputies have been laid off since Friday, when the sheriff announced he didn't have enough money to pay them. Officers from the Idaho State Police and the city police department are filling in until Oct. 1, when the new fiscal year begins.

Commissioners say Jax's overspending resulted from hiring too many jailers. Jax says the board approved all the hiring but didn't give him enough money to meet expenses. He hired five full-time jailers and five part-time jailers. The commissioners say he only needs four full-timers.

On Tuesday, Jax's attorney sent commissioners a blistering letter accusing them of meeting behind closed doors and pressuring the sheriff to resign.

Henslee said the other commissioners had suggested that Jax resign to resolve the issue.

But he said cutting the sheriff's pay by $9,400 next year was "somewhat politically inspired" because of Jax's "incompetency to watch his budget."

County officials plan to ask a judge to allow them to allocate more money to pay the bills for the rest of the month. By law, elected officials can't overspend their budget except in case of emergency. The county has just over $7 left this month for goods and services.

Henslee said he didn't know when they would set a court date. Commissioners are still trying to get information on bills and employees from Jax.

Jax was not available for comment on Wednesday.

But on Aug. 11, when "Good Morning America" filmed militia members at the Jerome Gun Club, Sherwood refused to fire a shot for the cameras.

"I'm a pacifist," he told the press. "I only teach people how to shoot enhance waterfowl and big game habitat will extend onto the Camas Prairie.

Another $1 million will be spent to offset habitat losses caused by Palisades Dam, near the Wyoming state line.

Yet another funding priority will be an in-depth assessment of resident fish losses on the Snake River upstream of the Hells Canyon dam complex. Bowler said, fish biologists will be trying to determine what effect Idaho Power Co. and Bureau of Reclamation dams have had on resident trout and salmon.

The Hells Canyon dams blocked salmon and steelhead from migrating up the Snake River, so there is a strong obligation to help the resident fish population, Bowler said.

safely in self-defense."

Webster's Dictionary says pacifists "oppose the use of force under any circumstances . . ." Has Sherwood really traded guns for Gandhi? Or does he have one message for network television cameras and another for the folks in Lemhi and Custer counties?

Sherwood isn't just struggling with abortion and gay rights and pacifism. He's also struggling — again — with his arithmetic.

This summer, Sherwood has boasted that the USMA has 30 to 40 dues-paying members and 500 members overall (July, Idaho Statesman); 5,000 members (August, The Times-News); 25,000 members (June, States News Service); and now 1,500 members (September, Washington Post).

Meanwhile, attendance for his monthly meetings has dipped to 20 diehards.

These militiamen will gather in Boise today and in Twin Falls Friday to hear Sherwood speak on the ICA's anti-abortion and "Family and Child Protection" initiatives.

Whether Sherwood's message will be pro-gay or anti-gay, pro-life or pro-choice, is anybody's guess.

Fatal crash closes I-15 in Salt Lake

SOUTH SALT LAKE (AP) — Four people died and four were injured in a fiery accident involving two semi-tractor-trailer trucks and six cars on Interstate 15 on Wednesday.

Traffic on the main freeway through Salt Lake was snarled much of the day after the 10 a.m. accident closed both north and south-bound lanes through an industrial district. The Utah Highway Patrol was investigating and clearing wreckage in the southbound lanes, which remained closed late in the afternoon.

The two truck drivers were killed as flames engulfed their trucks, and two other motorists also died. The names of the dead and injured were being withheld pending notification of relatives, Utah Highway Patrol said.

Two of the injured, a 79-year-old man and an 18-year-old woman, were seriously hurt. Arthur Strong was treated for burns at University of Utah Medical Center and was in serious condition Wednesday afternoon.

The woman was in critical condition at LDS Hospital with smoke inhalation and lung problems. Four others were treated for minor injuries and released at FHP Hospital, and two others were observed and released at Salt Lake Valley Regional Medical Center.

Utah Highway Patrol Sgt. Dan Catlin said about 20 people were involved in the accident.

The preliminary investigation indicated that the driver of a small red Hyundai in the left northbound lane made an abrupt move to the center lane, where her car collided with a semi-tractor-trailer, Catlin said. Her car became pinned underneath.

The truck driver, hauling building supplies, apparently swerved to the left, crossed the median and collided with a car and a south-bound truck. Four other cars plowed into the wreckage, and the two trucks caught fire.

"Immediately, the semi burst into flames," said witness Sandra Huber of Seattle, who was traveling southbound. "I just jumped out and started helping."

The driver and passengers seemed shaken but OK in the first wrecked car she reached. In the second, one man was dead and a second man was trapped inside.

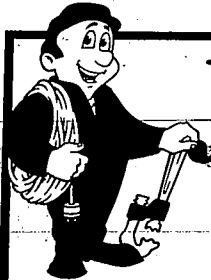

Gary Guymon was traveling with a friend on a nearby surface street when he saw the plume of smoke rising from the freeway. Realizing there had been a serious accident, he jumped from the car and ran to the freeway to help.

On the scene, an emergency medical technician shouted to him to help the victims near the semi-trucks. Guymon spotted the woman trapped inside her Hyundai under the truck.

"She was screaming to us, she was crying," Guymon said. "There were about 10 of us trying to help her."

Game plurals have no 's'

The plural of "bear" is "bears." But hunters and anglers of yore dropped the final "s" in plural names of creatures regarded as game. No one who "hunts bears" would have written "The Three Bears." You can apply the game plural to a good many fish, fowl and fine furry animals.

By World War I, doughnuts already had been around a long time, but that was when they first became so popular. The Salvation Army cooked them in garbage cans and served them to the troops on bayonets.

Lighter load of books weighs on librarians

DEAR ABBY: You could do us librarians an enormous favor if you would print this to help us retrieve some of those books that have wandered away.

Summer is over, and many school librarians, like me, have completed the dreaded "inventory" chore. This is always disheartening as we tally the books that have disappeared. Some moved with students, some were honestly misplaced, and others simply "walked off" in pockets or backpacks. Meanwhile, book prices soar, school budgets plummet, and replacing these books is next to impossible.

Parents, you can help, too. If you find a book with a library stamp in your child's room, return it. If, while unpacking the moving boxes, you uncover a book from your old school, mail it back. We will be happy to receive it, no questions asked, no fines imposed.

Dear Abby
Abigail VanBuren

Be aware that if a book looks like a library book, it probably is a library book.

Please don't sell these books at garage sales, give them to friends, throw them away, or assume that the librarians won't care one way or another. We do care. Books that have gone astray will be welcomed back with open arms by the young readers who have yet to enjoy them.

—TERESA BATEMAN,
BRIGADOON ELEMENTARY SCHOOL, FEDERAL WAY, WASH.

DEAR TERESA BATEMAN: I am certain you speak for countless librarians throughout the land.

Parents, children, please heed this plea: Round up all the library books and return them to their rightful owners immediately. To keep them is tantamount to stealing.

DEAR ABBY: In view of all the serious problems in the world, this may seem small to you, but to me it's a big one — and it bothers me. I am a divorced woman with three grown children. My ex has remarried. I waited a long time for grandchildren, and now I have three.

My ex's wife refers to herself as my grandchildren's grandmother. This woman has two daughters. She is much younger than I and will probably have grandchildren of her own someday.

I would never dream of calling myself grandmother to someone else's grandchildren.

I say, don't confuse the children with all these "grandmothers"; it's tough enough to know the players without a scorecard. Abby, don't you agree she should think of another name for my grandchildren to call her?

—ANGRY GRANDMOTHER
DEAR GRANDMOTHER: Your anger is probably justified, but if you're wise, you won't quibble about what the children call your ex's new wife. Technically, she is their step-grandmother.

Your energies would be better spent on being the granny who spends quality time with them — reading to them, taking them on outings, etc. Sooner or later they'll figure out who's who — and what's what.

CONFIDENTIAL TO THINKING OF DROPPING OUT IN N.H.: Abraham Lincoln said, "I will prepare, and someday my chance will come." Stay in school and get prepared, so you'll be ready when opportunity knocks.

Bomb suspect eludes police

PARIS (AP) — His face is everywhere, but anti-terrorism police trying to solve a wave of bombings can't find him anywhere.

More than 170,000 posters of France's most-wanted man, Khaled Kelkal, have been plastered on the walls of bus stops, train stations, post offices and even grocery stores. Army troops and national police have taken up positions at airports and border crossings. On Wednesday, soldiers were sent to guard the French side of the English Channel tunnel.

The Interior Ministry has even posted a "substantial reward" for information leading to the arrest of the 24-year-old Algerian, whose fingerprints were on an unexploded bomb found last month on train tracks near Lyon.

But the scruffy man pictured in jeans and high-top sneakers is still at large, his smirking photograph a silent taunt at authorities trying to solve six bombings or attempted bombings in as many weeks. Investigators have complained that a lack of cooperation among police agencies has hindered the probe.

President Jacques Chirac warned investigative chiefs that "when we get out of this crisis" he will "judge their competence and will to tear down the barriers that could exist" between the departments. "I will take the necessary measures, at all levels," he said on national television Sunday.

TV's Sherlock Holmes dies

LONDON (AP) — Jeremy Brett, the actor who brought the legendary detective Sherlock Holmes to life on television, has died at age 39.

Granada Television said Brett, star of the 41 episodes of its Sherlock Holmes series, died of heart failure in his sleep early Tuesday at his London home.

Brett's portrayal of Holmes was regarded as one of the finest ever. Tall and dark, with a hawk-like profile and piercing eyes, he seemed made for the part.

"A finer Sherlock Holmes has never, and will never, exist," said Sally Head, Granada's controller of drama.

His films include "Nicholas and Alexandra," and "My Fair Lady," and on television, he played Max de Winter in "Rebecca," and Robert Browning in "The Barretts of Wimpole Street."

Military plane crash may have killed 75

COLOMBO, Sri Lanka (AP) — A military transport plane crashed into the sea in stormy weather off Sri Lanka's west coast Wednesday, and all 75 troops and crew on board were feared killed.

The plane had been carrying troops for a planned offensive against Tamil guerrillas. But air force officials said there was no evidence it was brought down by Tamil rebels.

The AN-32 was headed for Palali air force base in northern Sri Lanka. It had just taken off from Ratmalana airport, seven miles south of Colombo, in a driving rain when it disappeared from radar screens, said Brig. Sarath Munasinghe, a military spokesman.

An officer prepares posters of France's most wanted man, Khaled Kelkal, at the Arras police headquarters in northern France Tuesday.

Justice Minister Jacques Toubon met Wednesday with the national prosecutor and France's anti-terrorism judges. "We have to prevent terrorism acts and catch the authors," he said in a terse statement afterward.

Police late Wednesday were scouring the eastern city of Colmar after a gas station attendant reported seeing a man with a strong resemblance to Kelkal. A wanted poster of Kelkal hangs in the gas station, and police said they were looking for the suspect's light green Ford.

Working on a theory that Kelkal may have made his way to the south of France in a stolen car, authorities also stepped up patrols in the Mediterranean port of Marseille, police sources said.

Nature: the best designer

The South Hills have afforded many Magic Valley residents an entertaining day away from it all. My family and I have not plumbed the depths, nor scaled the heights of their many and varied natural surprises.

The Rogerson turnoff provides access to one of these. The road leads up to the Magic Mountain Ski Resort, winding through pleasant woods and forests. After about three miles, Buck Skin Road forks off to the right. From there, an easy uphill hike brings one to the place that my son came across on one of his cross country runs.

On Safari Peter Page

His description of "giant lava pancakes" sounded intriguing enough to warrant making the trek. Characteristic of this area, the woods give way to a band of low, dense scrub and then on to grassy knolls at the very tops of the hills. From the top, one can gain a panoramic view of Idaho, Utah and Nevada. The sprawling landscape captures the photographer, artist and naturalist in me all at the same time.

I was in no hurry, so my spirited guide, best friend and son acquiesced to a slower climb of this particular summit.

The birds were singing a cheerful tune, bees buzzed with apparent contentment and I whistled a happy tune. Besides, the stone pancakes would probably stay where they were for a while longer. It had been a long time since I had felt the scratch of prairie grasses on my legs.

Memories of childhood outings through Africa's bush veldt and vast plains of tall elephant grass scattered with flat-topped thorn trees welled up in my head.

Far off down the undulating valleys, the fierce Idaho sun had burnt the meadows to a silvery gold. Still more images of the African bush invaded my mind.

Without really realizing it, my distant daydreams had brought me to a halt — but an impatient look from my fellow hiker had me back on schedule. We gained the top with no further delays.

The hardest part was over and our geological breakfast was ready and waiting.

Several piles of what looked like flat, stone pancakes dotted the area below us. Farther over, more majestic buttresses of layered lava spilled out over the grassy meadow. Mahogany brown, black and grey formations encrusted with yellow and orange lichen stood guard over the peaceful valley.

The rock formations were simply a springboard for my mind's eye, enabling it to race home to favorite places in my far-flung upbringing. Giant rocks of granite, rounded with the abrasion of time and nature, provided hours of imaginative fun.

It was a return to childhood — with caves and castles, tunnels and towers that transformed me into knights and warriors while my parents sat in the shade of mimosa trees enjoying a well-earned weekend.

But the South Hills rocks were made for climbing, and that is just what I did. Actually, the kid in me made me do it. As the sun rose into a cloud-studded sky, we sat in the shade and mused at just how these shapes came about. Theories came one after the other, the next greater than the last.

No matter how much talent I have in the arts, I had to concede once again that nature is the best sculptor I have ever seen. Once again, the evidence lay before me — wonderful pancakes, good enough to visit time and again, no cooking necessary and no syrup required.

A native of South Africa, Peter Page gained his appreciation for the outdoors during his childhood in Rhodesia — now known as Zimbabwe. He came to the United States as a young man and now co-manages a small grocery in Jerome.

Outdoors Going 'Bach' to the mountains

By Mark Weber
Times-News correspondent

MACKAY — At 12,140 feet, Mount Breitenbach towers nearly 4,000 feet above the Pahsimeroi Valley. Its imposing north face scarps uninterrupted vertically for 2,000 feet, a massive swath of fluted rock, ice and snow.

Named for Jake Breitenbach, who died during the 1963 American Everest Expedition, it is Idaho's fifth-highest peak.

It is a magnet for climbers, so a friend and I gave it a shot on a recent outing. We gained the summit, but didn't get down fast enough — and had to spend the night huddled at more than 12,000 feet.

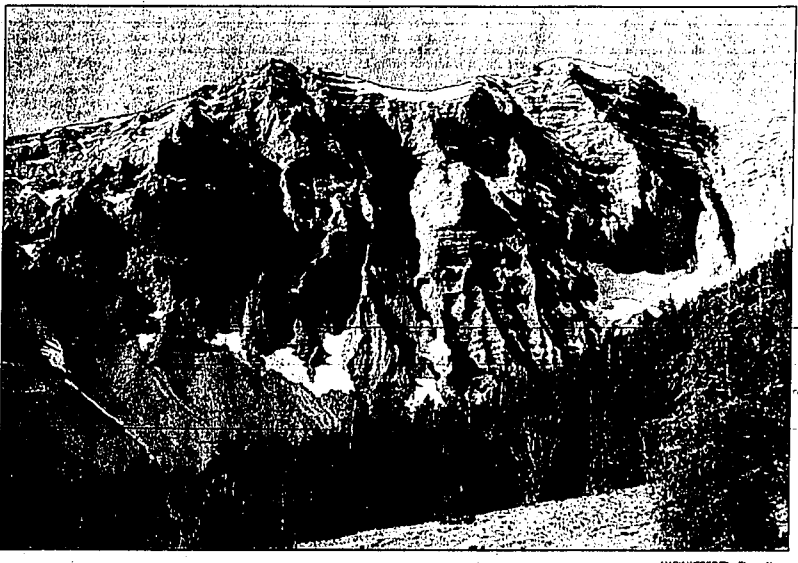

Although prepared, we were a little surprised to find ourselves in such circumstances. We'd been caught out at night on other mountains during other climbs, but I felt I'd outgrown this sort of epic.

So it goes in the mountains.

First climbed in 1982, our route ascended ribbons of snow and ice that snake their way up the huge face while crossing two sections of exposed and deteriorating rock; in all, there are 16 to 18 pitches of roped climbing. The route didn't have a second ascent until 1986, and of the handful of climbers who have attempted it since then, few have made the summit.

We began the climb by cruising up nearly 1,000 feet of steep snow and overcoming a couple of small rock steps before arriving at the first difficult section — a band of rotten and crumbling rock that forms a small cliff. All morning long, good-sized rocks had been cascading down the face, bouncing off the walls and flying over our heads.

Eric had the lead and he began to scale the crumbling cliff while I belayed from the shelter of a small outcrop. On a sunny day at the City of Rocks, this short pitch would have offered little challenge, but — at 11,000 feet with backpacks, crampons and mountain boots — I was glad it was Eric's lead. He climbed up through the loose and shattered lower reaches, only to be stopped by a steep and unprotected section near the top.

After several tries, his confidence withered away and he relinquished the lead to me. As he had been struggling, I had been sizing up other routes to overcome the cliff. After one false start, I found the key and I climbed beyond the cliff to a small, sloping ledge.

The position was very exposed to incoming rocks, so I yelled down for Eric to hurry along. A moment later, I heard another salvo of rocks ricochet off the walls above.

"Rocks! Rocks!" I yelled, before turning my back into the line of fire and covering the back of my neck. Several large stones struck the wall and exploded to my left, while another small rock smacked the back of my helmet as if to say, "Warning! The odds are catching up with you."

The longer we spent on the face, the higher our chances of being hit.

Climbing snow again, we made another 350 feet, but the mountain slowly was wearing me down. The crumbling rock pitch and the near miss on the ledge had weakened my resolve. We were surrounded by rock walls in a narrow, snow-filled gully known as a couloir. As I rounded a corner, the most difficult — or crux — pitch came into view.

A vertical wall of shattered rock plates and table-size blocks choked the couloir. Climbing it would have been folly, but Eric silently sized up the wall as if he intended to take a whack at it.

"Look, man, if you fall off this thing, there's a good chance the rope could be cut on those sharp edges," I cautioned.

Eric agreed, then told me that, in his opinion, I was the better rock climber and, therefore, it was only right that it should be my lead.

"No way, buddy!" I snapped back.

Eric looked down and, to my surprise, replied, "I'll give it a try."

He dropped his pack and began digging for his rock shoes. At this point, it was late in the afternoon, and our options weren't good. We could either attempt the wall above and hopefully make it, or start an epic descent — leaving much of our gear behind as rappel anchors. I was glad Eric had volunteered, but at the same time I fretted over the consequences if something went wrong.

We both knew there was no chance of a speedy rescue and even a minor injury could become deadly.

As Eric worked his way up the rock face, I gathered he was trying to redeem himself after backing down the earlier, easier pitch. If that was his motivation, it did the job.

It may have been crazy, but it was a truly heroic lead. To save time, I followed in mountain boots with my ice axes holstered at my sides. What had appeared merely terrifying from the belay was, in fact, totally horrific. My clunky boots skated across the face as my fingers groped for holds.

When I reached the belay, my legs were shaking and I was out of breath. Eric couldn't help but crack a grin.

I congratulated him for his outstanding effort as we prepared to finish the climb. The couloir had narrowed considerably and was, in places, only about 8 feet wide. We were on steep snow, and passed beneath a huge boulder wedged between the walls 20 feet overhead. From there, we pushed on toward the summit.

We finally topped out at about 10 p.m. We were hoping for a quick descent via a "walk-off" route, but were thwarted by steep terrain with no easy way down. Exhausted and with failing light, we made the decision to bivouac.

It was a long night but, around 5 a.m., an orange glow finally began to develop to the east. Still shivering and stiff from the night's inactivity, we packed up gear and resumed our descent.

It took the better part of the morning to descend via the east ridge. We down-climbed hundreds of feet of steep snow and rappelled one cliff section, then we were on the trail and headed for Eric's truck.

As we stumbled down the trail, exhausted and hungry, life seemed just a little sweeter than it had before.

Eric Thomas swiftly climbs easy ground on the lower slopes of Mount Breitenbach.

Teen wins whole shooting match

Colorado Springs
Gazette Telegraph

ELLIOTT, Colo. — Jason Booker knew it was time.

He had no fewer than 27 clocks among the hundreds of trophies, plaques and miscellaneous awards he's collected on the trapshooting circuit the past 10 years, and his list of credentials included at least nine Amateur Trapshooting Association records.

He'd been the youngest (14) to win the state title, the youngest to break 100 targets in doubles competition, the youngest to become a 27-handicap shooter, then to break 100 and score a grand slam from the 27-yard line.

He'd been the big time, the show, the ATA Grand American World Trapshooting Tournament. He'd been on the sub-junior or junior all-American team eight times — team captain seven — and was champion of champions for his age group in 1992.

He tied for second a year ago, so when he stepped up to the line at this year's Grand, the premier event in trapshooting, in Vandalia, Ohio, Aug. 10-19, he really wasn't too nervous about the whole thing.

"I wasn't thinking about anything else except hitting the targets," he said. "People later told me about all the excitement and the noise going on behind me, but I didn't hear or see a thing."

Instead, he kept his head down. Kept his eye in the targets. Fired. Followed through ... and eventually won the whole shooting match — among a field of 4,144 competitors.

Booker missed only one target in each of the clay target (singles), Grand American handicap and doubles events to finish with 397 out of a possible 400.

The performance earned him the high all-around, the best total score in the big three events of the tournament — and the prestigious Grand championship.

Along the way, he matched his last year's score of 99 in the handicap to finish in a six-way tie, but scored the only perfect 25 in the single-round shootoff.

"I missed the 82nd target last year and the 83rd this year," he said, cracking a smile, taking a break from making deliveries for the family's Big Valley Farms sod farm operation, just a little east of Elliott High School, where he played football and baseball and wrestled.

"At that rate, I figure I'll break 100 in another 17 years."

Well, maybe a little sooner. At 19, he's probably the youngest ever to win the Grand championship — certainly the youngest from the 27-yard line. And he plans to keep shooting for a long time.

"I'll try to repeat," Booker said. "No one's ever done that before. It's the goal now."

"I have work available for me, and maybe college — but no matter what I do, I'll be involved in shooting. I've always been around it. There's just something about it."

His father, Don, and mother, Charla, have offered encouragement and support. And working at the family sod-farm business, complete with a practice facility, provides the flexibility to travel and compete.

"I might get home from a shoot Sunday night or Monday, then work two days and go back," Booker said. "If I'm not shooting I'll work all week — but be ready to go when the next one comes along."

Several bird hunting seasons open Saturday

The Times-News

— JEROME — Several upland game bird seasons will open Saturday in the Magic Valley region, including sage grouse, sharp-tailed grouse, chukar, gray partridge and valley quail.

Most bird hunters will be gunning for ponderous "brush buzzards" — as sage grouse are sometimes known — and the other upland gamebirds generally are shot as an afterthought.

Sage grouse hunters probably will find lower bid numbers than they did last year, and birds will be harder to find, according to the Idaho Department of Fish and Game's regional office in Jerome.

The numbers are down because of the cold, wet weather in May and June. In addition to killing young birds, the unusually harsh weather was tough on insects — which are a staple food for sage grouse.

Last year, sage grouse numbers throughout the region were higher than they'd been since 1968. The census data were gathered from hunters and wings collected throughout the season.

The high numbers sparked hopes that 1995 would be an equally good year — but hunters should be prepared to work harder for their birds. Besides having fewer birds, southern Idaho has excellent habitat this year — with plenty of hiding cover, forage and dispersed water sites.

The upshot is that sage grouse probably will be hard to find.

Quail numbers should be comparable to last year. Many observers say that good quail hunting will be found in the Gooding, Hagerman, Tuttle and Glens Ferry areas.

On the sharp-tailed scene, hunters should note that sharp-tailed grouse have been released in the South Hills — Unit 54 — but there is no open season this year.

'Wolf Wars' recounts animal's return

The Associated Press

Hank Fischer raced south on Interstate 90 from his home in Missoula, Mont., toward Yellowstone National Park. He was late for a date with destiny.

It was Jan. 12, now considered a milestone in the quest to reclaim some of America's wilderness lost in the nation's westward expansion.

It was the day the wolf returned to Yellowstone National Park. Fischer, regional representative of the conservation group Defenders of Wildlife, was a player in the long political and legal fight to restore the endangered gray wolf to a region where it was exterminated earlier this century.

In his book "Wolf Wars," Fischer describes how Canadian wolves came to be released in Yellowstone and central Idaho. The release began a five-year recovery plan whose future is unclear because of efforts in Congress to block funding.

But as Fischer sped to Yellowstone in time to see the penned wolves trucked out, these political battles and a lawsuit by ranching interests were not on his mind. "Most environmental battles don't have distinct beginnings or endings," he writes. "Too often, it's unclear whether a battle has been won, lost, or postponed. This time, things were different. I wanted to see those wolves hit the finish-line. I'd suffered through too many bad moments during the past 15 years not to be there for the best one."

The behind-the-scenes dramas make up the "wars" related by Fischer, who served on the federal Wolf Management Committee. He traces the convoluted trail leading to the release of 14 wolves in Yellowstone and 15 in central Idaho's wilderness areas early this year.

"You have the good guys," Fischer said in an interview from his Missoula office. "You have the bad guys, and people you don't know whether they're good or bad. They're ambiguous."

And then there's Yellowstone. "It's just such an icon," he said. "It has such broad appeal here and around the world."

In Fischer's recounting, the wolf — once a bad guy — gradually is transformed into a hero of the environmental movement.

He explains how wolves became hated in the West as settlers killed off bison and other wildlife and the wolf turned to cattle and sheep for food.

For years, he says, "no one had a good answer to the most commonly asked question about wolves: what good are they?"

Later, biologists began to recognize the importance of predators in maintaining an ecological balance. Some believe Yellowstone's large elk herds, lacking few natural enemies, are overgrazing the park, for example.

Wolf restoration gained momentum in 1973 when Congress approved the Endangered Species Act, mandating recovery plans for wolves and other endangered species.

An agency that helped wipe out the predator in the lower 48 states — the U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service, formerly the Biological Survey — started laying the groundwork for wolf recovery.

Ranchers and other opponents lobbied Congress to spike wolf reintroduction. Ranchers feared wolves would kill their livestock; others feared their presence would limit use of public lands.

In 1980, amid growing polarization, the Northern Rocky Mountain Wolf Recovery Team assembled by the Fish and Wildlife Service produced a plan that Fischer calls "a study in superficiality." It did not mention restoring wolves to Yellowstone.

A revised plan in 1985 recommended releasing wolves in Yellowstone. The Fish and Wildlife Service approved the plan two years later.

It wasn't until 1991 that Congress approved money for an environmental impact statement. Fischer relives the frustrations of cajoling funds out of a Congress reluctant to offend opponents of wolf restoration, and the public hearings that followed.

Fischer's Defenders of Wildlife created a $100,000 fund to compensate ranchers who lost livestock to wolves.

The fund is part of the final wolf plan signed by Interior Secretary Bruce Babbitt June 15, 1994.

Through it all, help came from unexpected sources. Fischer credits former Sen. Jim McClure, R-Idaho, mistrusted by environmentalists, with helping prod wolf recovery when politics stalled it.

Opposition also came from unexpected quarters. Environmental groups such as the Sierra Club Legal Defense Fund and the National Audubon Society objected to stripping the transplanted wolves in Idaho of the Endangered Species Act's full protection because an unknown number of wolves believed to already exist would be affected.

The wolves in Idaho and Yellowstone are considered an "experimental population" under an amendment to the act, allowing problem animals to be moved or killed under certain circumstances.

Since the wolves' release, two have been shot — one in Idaho and one in Montana, where it had roamed from Yellowstone — and two litters of wolves have been born.

Fischer says the experience is a poor model for restoring endangered species. He believes it was too long, too divisive and too expensive — $6 million and counting.

"We need leaders who will promote cooperation rather than confrontation," he writes. "And we need interest groups — both industry and environmental — that truly want to find answers."

Wolf pack adults caught, set to be transplanted

BOZEMAN, Mont. (AP) — A federal wolf specialist has caught five of the six wolves suspected of killing cattle in southwestern Montana.

Ed Bangs, who heads the federal wolf recovery project in the Intermountain West, said the Animal Damage Control specialist was using leg-hold traps that the wolves have survived albeit with some sore and swollen feet.

Three pups born in the spring, one subadult female and one adult male have been captured, Bangs said. One of the pups has been radio-collared and released in hopes it will lead trappers to its mother.

Bangs said the three pups probably will be radio-collared and released in the same area where they were captured, between Deer Lodge and Basin. With teeth only half an inch long, the pups are too small to kill livestock, he said, and wolf managers hope they will learn to hunt wild animals.

The two adults and the subadult will be released in another area, probably Glacier National Park, Bangs said. The animals are now in holding pens in Helena.

"My guess is the adults were the ones doing the killing" of three calves, Bangs said.

The pack is known as the Boulder pack.

With the advent of hunting season, the unattended wolf pups probably will be able to bring down wounded or unretrieved deer, Bangs said. Without adults around to teach them to kill cattle, the pups may not develop a taste for it.

Bangs said he is not optimistic about the adult wolves staying wherever they are released.

Wolves taken to new territory tend to move considerable distances. Past relocations have generally resulted in dead wolves.

Wolves released in Yellowstone National Park and in central Idaho last winter have thrived, however, because they were released in vast areas with little livestock and huge numbers of game animals, Bangs said. They were also able to wander without getting in trouble.

At the height of the competition season, he'll go through a minimum of 1,000 Federal shells a week. He might shoot locally at the Izak Walton League range, just to keep in practice. He might go to a miss' much in Lafayette, or maybe in Salida. Or he might travel across the country.

In a typical year, he'll enter at least three major meets leading to the Grand, and will tour the five for two or three weeks to acclimate to the weather.

Otherwise, he mainly does what comes naturally.

"Just shoot," Booker said. "I really don't make any major adjustments going into competition. There's a lot of hand-eye coordination involved, and a lot of practice, but anybody can break targets."

"In a major meet, you just have to be in some kind of physical shape and a good night's sleep doesn't hurt. But when you're young and dumb like me, it's not too much of a problem."

"When not firing the shotgun — usually still a Remington 1100 — Booker enjoys shooting pool and working on his pickup, "to make it a little nicer." And hunting ... naturally.

"Birds, big game, prairie dogs, coyotes — I enjoy it all and it's good practice for me," Booker said. "It's all a matter of seeing your target, of knowing where it's at, and shooting. You have to pay attention, get your eye back in. During dove season I'll miss — but next time I won't. It's just practice."

"I like getting away from it all for big-game hunting, but it's just as much fun bird hunting in a Kansas stubblefield with all my buddies."

Booker's success has not surprised two of his primary mentors, his father and 35-year competition trap-shooting veteran Dick Gish.

"Hell, yes, it's what we were doing this for," Don Booker said, smiling broadly, laughing, when asked whether he expected Grand champion 10-11 years ago when he introduced his son to shooting.

"No, really, I never pushed him, but I gave him good equipment and ammunition and saw that he had the competitions he needed in order to bring out his potential. When you have the desire, the equipment and the individual talent, why wouldn't you have a Grand Am winner?"

Gish met the Bookers when Don operated the Double D Guns and Ammo shop and took Jason under his wing, taking him to practice sessions and meets when Don could not get away.

"We just got along good and turned out to be good friends," Gish said. "He didn't miss much during the meets, though sometimes I had to hold his shotgun while he was chasing lizards or trying to steal banners."

"There's money in trapshooting, and Jason has what it takes to make some. The main thing now is for him to keep the same personality he has now."

Indeed, Jason Booker seems unaffected by his success.

"The dove season's coming up, and I've got that scoped out," he said. "I can just go back behind the farm for that. I can go up the road a couple miles for antelope, and hunt deer a ways east of here."

And prepare to defend his title — naturally.

Gas prices help hold inflation

The Associated Press

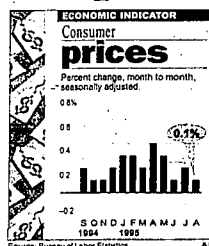

WASHINGTON — Big declines in the cost of gasoline and airline tickets held consumer price inflation to 0.1 percent last month while the economy showed fresh signs of perking up.

The good news on inflation, disclosed in the Labor Department's Consumer Price report, came Wednesday as the Federal Reserve released its latest national survey of economic conditions.

The Fed survey, compiled from reports from the Fed's 12 regional banks, said construction activity was strengthening in many parts of the country.

The Chicago and St. Louis districts noted strong home sales and Cleveland, Atlanta and San Francisco reported a rebound in nonresidential construction.

The central bank also noted that a steep slide in manufacturing appeared to be bottoming out and it blamed reports of weakness in retail sales and farming on temporary weather factors.

Many analysts said the Fed's economic survey, which will be used by policy-makers when they meet Sep-26, would persuade the Fed to leave interest rates unchanged despite the fact that investors have pushed stocks to new highs on a belief that further rate cuts are in store.

In August, energy prices fell by 0.8 percent. Gasoline pump prices plunged 2.9 percent, the biggest decrease since March 1991.

Airline fares also took a big drop for the month, falling 3.5 percent. It was the second large monthly decline in fares following a steep ramp in prices that still left them rising at an annual rate of 22.7 percent this year.

Food prices were up 0.2 percent in August with declines in dairy products, fruit and vegetables prices offsetting increases for pork, poultry and fish.

Excluding the volatile food and energy sectors, prices were up 0.2 percent, the fourth straight month that the core rate has risen by this moderate amount.

PORTLAND, Ore. — Fred Meyer Inc. says it will invest $170 million in Washington's Puget Sound area, through next year.

The money is being used to build stores and a food distribution center, and to remodel existing stores.

"While a slowdown in the local economy, combined with significant growth in retail competition, has made retreating tougher for Seattle stores over the past year, including Fred Meyer, the long-term prospects for the area are very bright," said Robert G. Miller, Fred Meyer's chairman and chief executive officer.

The retailer will open a 124,000-square-foot store in Lake City, Wash., and a 174,000-square-foot outlet in Renton, Wash., Wednesday.

With the openings, Portland-based Fred Meyer will have 135 stores in seven Western states. It is also building a store in Twin Falls.

Since its entry into the Seattle market in 1959, Fred Meyer's stake in the region has grown to include 25 large, "one-stop-shopping" stores. In 1993 and 1994, the company invested $70 million in the market that runs from Bellingham to Olympia.

The Washington expansion is part of Fred Meyer's strategy to open at least 30 to 35 full-size stores and complete 30 to 40 major remodeling jobs during the next five years. These will be mainly in existing markets in Oregon, Washington, Idaho and Utah.

The expansion and remodeling comes during a turbulent time for the retail chain. The company's stock has dropped 24 percent in the past year.

Stocks hit record helped by consumer interests

The Associated Press

NEW YORK — Stocks ended a volatile session at record-closing highs, as strength in consumer stocks overrode weakened bonds and cyclical shares, those that are sensitive to swings in the economy.

The Dow Jones industrial average gained 18.31 points to close at 4,765.52, pushing the blue-chip index to a new high for the second consecutive session.

Volume on the New York Stock Exchange was robust at revised 384.42 million shares as of 4 p.m., down from 355.25 million on Tuesday.

Microsoft network futuristic, but needs tuning

Knight-Ridder News Service

Poor Microsoft. The company that made Windows an immutable force instead of a breakable object and turned Bill Gates into the richest man in the world now begins a battle in which it's the little guy.

But Microsoft is so powerful that the little guy is the most feared of all. The software company jumped into the commercial online service business last month when Microsoft Network — just call it MSN — was launched in tandem with the company's Windows 95 computer operating system.

There have been howls from competitors such as America Online, CompuServe and Prodigy because Microsoft gave itself an advantage none of them has: It has included MSN in the Windows 95 software. So when you buy Windows 95, you get an MSN icon on your screen.

Other than just imitating its established competitors, MSN forges some new frontiers, using more elaborate artwork and bringing some technological advances to the online world.

But there are still a few bugs. And there's not a lot of information out there yet. You'll click on choices and a message that the feature isn't available at that moment. Or you'll navigate through a series of choices only to reach a destination that's still empty.

Empty is, unfortunately, a common problem in MSN. You can go to the travel area or the business area or the news section and find wonderful topic listings. But when you open them, you often find nothing but a note describing what's to come. Occasionally, you'll even find a note asking if you'd like to be the director of the zone you picked!

If you're looking for volumes of information on any subject, MSN doesn't compare to the older services. For now, it isn't a better choice than the other online systems. But it is raising the bar in some ways that the rest of the field is going to have to match.

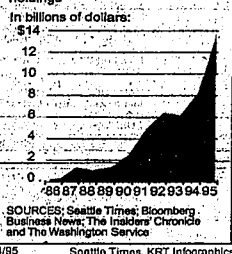

Here's how it works: Getting onto MSN is as easy as clicking the MSN button. Your first time, you'll have to answer some simple questions and tell how you plan to pay. Prodigy, America Online and CompuServe are all equally easy to get going — once you've got the software in your computer and icon on your screen. That's why America Online papers the door to the service, while CompuServe disks the rest of the month, trying to get its foot in the door before MSN could rush by.

Once you're connected to MSN, though, anyone familiar with other online services recognizes what's ahead: a mix of the old and the new. You don't get a "welcome" screen — you get TWO. And they're very different.

The first is a flat white panel with typical menu choices. The ones labeled "MSN Today" and "Categories" lead you to all the material available. Then there are obvious choices, such as "Member Services," "E-mail" and "Favorite Places" (which is empty until you fill it).

Gates' wealth

Bill Gates' wealth has risen with Microsoft's success. Over the years, he has sold stock worth a total of $1.45 billion; had he not sold a share, his holdings at a price of $98.50 a share would be $19.1 billion. Value of stock holdings:

But then the second welcome display fills the screen. It's "MSN Today," a collage of pictures and text floating above artfully blurry background images. The three-dimensional art is a unique approach that may be unsettling at first, but can grow on you.

Each picture has a three-to-five-word description that is often painstakingly hip (the personal finance area is called "Investment Biker" instead of "Investment Banker"). You can click on one and visit the MIDI music forum or the stay-at-home-dads chat group or the SOHO (computer for Small Office/Home Office) resource zone. If you start clicking and moving through the two welcome screens, you'll probably be puzzled to learn that the rules are terribly inconsistent. Sometimes, opening a new choice closes the previous one; other times, it doesn't. Sometimes you close one window and it says you're signing off the whole network. Sometimes you can have a dozen windows open. Sometimes you ask for a topic that would seem to have a lot of information and find almost nothing. Other times you're after the same topic and find tons.

What gives? You've encountered "the two faces of MSN." Once you realize the two personalities and the different rules for dealing with them, though, MSN suddenly is converted into an easy-to-use, enjoyable service. The differing styles of the two sides of MSN are comparable to the differences between Microsoft's old and new Windows operating systems.

The first style — which matches the plain welcome screen — has the old-fashioned feel of Windows 3.1. You have a menu bar with choices along the top. And once you get past the first menu screen, you have folders and icons that you click on.

How the networks compare

Most of the major commercial online services charge about $10 a month for a handful of hours, plus about for each additional hour. The new Microsoft Network charges a base fee of $4.95 a month. All provide access to the Internet. Here's a look at their features:

CompuServe

Using It: Most people use a graphical point-and-click interface. Available for Windows, Macintosh and OS/2 systems. What's there: It's built largely around forums and libraries of software or information files. Has an interface to a lot of business and research "search engines" — such as a nationwide telephone book and business profiles. Also: many forums on professional subjects. Best feature: The place to be for customer service on computer issues. Hardware makers, software writers and retailers answer questions posted electronically. Worst: Doesn't have pictures and sound files as part of the regular interface. Not as entertaining as other online services. Also: It can be slower. Contact: (800) 848-8990.

America Online

Using It: Windows and Macintosh software available. The most Windows-like of the major online services. What's there: Tons of information on a vast array of subjects. Built around a publisher model in which outside organizations — such as newspapers, interest groups, businesses or TV networks — provide forums and content. Best feature: Chat rooms and news section. Also: "Flash mail" lets you write and read e-mail while you're not connected — so the meter isn't running. Worst: Less creative use of pictures than others. Contact: (800) 827-6364.

Prodigy

Using It: DOS, Windows and Macintosh software available. It's a hybrid program that doesn't follow those software models closely, but is easy to use with point-and-click style. Style is light and fun. What's there: More home- and family-oriented than the others. Also notable for its financial discussion area and travel section. Best feature: Innovative use of artwork. Menu bar at the bottom with arrows for moving around easily. Worst: E-mail system not up to the level of the competitors. Contact: (800) PRODIGY.

MSN (Microsoft Network)

Using It: For now, you must have Windows 95, which installs software automatically and connects to it directly. What's there: Less content than the others — so far. Two-tiered style has one part that mirrors typical online services and another presenting hip and arty magazine style but is slower to use. There are a lot of facades that don't have much behind them yet, and a few technical glitches still being worked out. Best feature: Innovative style, integration to allow multimedia and interactive programs. Computer publication area already well-populated. Impressive full-screen artwork. Worst: Still buggy and not full of content. Contact: Must be using Windows 95 to connect to system.

real version of the Internet's World Wide Web.

The old Windows 3.1 style is where you'll find the vast majority of material. Under the "Categories" button, you'll find headings for most everything an online service usually has — chat areas, business forums, kids' spots, news updates.

Think of the "MSN Today" facade as a magazine. It isn't intended to be an easy way to move around the network, but rather, colorful suggestions for you to sample. Every day, it changes.

It even has a part called "MSN Life" that calls itself a user's magazine, used to find out about features you wouldn't necessarily notice.

While you're in the MSN Today side of the service, here's a warning: The process of loading a new viewing window and copying text network to your computer takes a LONG time. Using a typical 14.4 modem, the wait is frequently 20 to 30 seconds. That's why this facet of MSN isn't efficient for quickly searching for topics of interest.

Along with the novel format, MSN tries to introduce some technological advances. Because it's a part of the operating system, it can coordinate with parts of the computer — like the word processor, so that a player and a video player can move smoothly than other services. But so far, Microsoft is still struggling in this realm.

For instance, the sports area's only mention of baseball (no daily scores, standings or stats) is about Cal Ripken's longevity streak. MSN took an innovative approach to this by automatically copying a program to your computer that lets you compare your job or school attendance record with Ripken's 14-year ironman streak.

But when the program arrived on my machine, it wouldn't run because it looked for a program file that isn't included in Win95.

I resurrected the file from my old Windows 3.1 to make it work.

The multimedia section includes computer games, but the viewer program seeing them isn't available yet. And downloading a sound file from the nursing chat area took five minutes — much slower than can be done with the RealAudio software included in Microsoft's World Wide Web browser.

Like Prodigy, MSN carries advertisements. A recent MSN Today had an ad area that contained pictures and notes about a new book and a small cartoon in the corner. Click on the cartoon and you get a picture of Tony the Tiger pitching Frosted Flakes.

By comparison, America Online and CompuServe don't include ads.

Like the other services, MSN's content areas are filled with pointers to related material on the Internet, particularly discussion groups and World Wide Web sites.

All of the services, including MSN, provide Internet access. MSN also integrates electronic mail with other applications. So if you're typing a letter, instead of clicking on print, you can choose send and fire off the document as e-mail (it has to dial up and connect to the Internet to send it — it's not as automatic as television advertisements make it seem).

Like Windows 95, MSN doesn't provide a compelling reason to jump onboard right away. But its new wrinkles in artwork and technology show what the future of online services will be.
